ENGLAND EAGER FOR REDUCTION OF ARMAMENTS

London Times Declares Agreement on Navy Expenditures First Step in Anglo-American Entente—Ireland Not International Question.

LONDON, June 17.—In a lengthy double spaced editorial the London Times this morning discussed a dispatch from its Washington correspondent interpreting the attitude of the Harding administration, and American opinion, on the general aspects of a plan for a working Anglo-American understanding of world-wide scope, particularly on disarmament. The correspondent declared, in substance, that while Ireland and the apparent unwillingness of this country to apply the principle of equal opportunities in mandated territories were the chief obstacles to a working arrangement between the United States and Great Britain, the first step might be made in agreement to limit expenditures for naval armaments. The dispatch suggested initiative in reaching such an agreement might come from the British side. The editorial referring to the correspondent's suggestion should result in an announcement of the willingness of the British empire to agree to naval disarmament, commended the idea that the plan for the limitation be determined by a financial formula. It declared that, while Great Britain eagerly reciprocates the desire for an agreement it must be conditioned to circumstances in which this country stands. "Obligations of honor, as well as vital interests relative to the maintenance and consolidation of our relations with France on the basis of the Versailles treaty," the newspaper asserted, "are essential parts of our world policy."

The newspaper declared, in discussing the address of Charles E. Hughes, American secretary of state, at Providence, R. I., June 15, that there should be no discrimination in favor of nationals of any country. While declaring Great Britain should without delay settle the Irish question, the editorial concluded by saying: "Those who wish Ireland well cannot make a worse mistake than to regard the Irish question, even by implication, an international problem."

REPORT ANOTHER STRIKE AT THE BOSWELL MINE

Medford people in Grants Pass yesterday brought back the report of another rich strike in the Boswell mine. A tunnel being driven under the rich pay streak from which such fabulous amounts are being mined, opened up a very rich sulphide ore. Reports were flying around of this strike in Grants Pass. The residents of Holland were continuously phoning the city giving out the information. This will be very interesting to the many Medford people who are interested in the adjoining property.
