William J. Warner received his commission as postmaster of Medford this morning from the postoffice department. The commission certifies to his appointment for four year dating from the time the senate confirmed the appointment, May 13th last, and bears the signatures of President Warren G. Harding and Will H. Hays, postmaster general. Another feature of interest about the commission is that it is the first one issued so far in Oregon, Washington and Idaho, as of the 84 postoffice appointments confirmed by the senate out of 849 pending. Mr. Warner's was the only one from those states.

WALKING COSTS YOU NOTHING

—if your time is worth nothing.

But if there were gold for the first corners, twenty miles away, walking would cost you all that you would lose by not getting there quickly enough.

Doing without needed implements costs you nothing—

—if no profits can be made from their use; if your time and labor are worth nothing.

But you have a farm to operate. You have profits to make through increasing yields per acre; through cutting the cost of production; through making your time and labor worth more—through the use of good implements.

Doing without needed implements costs you all that you lose by not having them.

And it doesn't take long for the cost of not having, to run beyond the cost of buying.

Drop in and see the time-saving and labor-saving implements that we have ready to make real profits for you.
