The Crater lake season officially opened today and it seemed natural to see the stages waiting at the morning trains for incoming tourists. Only four tourists, three women and a man, went in the stage from here, but it is understood that about a dozen tourists went up on the stage from Klamath Falls. However, a number of tourists and others left for the lake this forenoon from this city in their own autos. The driver of the stage which arrived in Medford from the lake last night said autos still could only get within two miles of the lake, and that the visitors would be transported up to the lodge and lake rim on packhorses furnished by the Crater Lake company management.
