Ye Smudge Pot

By Arthur Perry

This is Armistice Day. Some of the soldiers who stood in the mud of Flanders, and rushed across the shell swept fields of the Argonne had no breakfast this morning. Scores of doughboys whose bodies halted bullets on the bloody fields of France, find succor for their wounds in brilliant orations to the halls of congress.

Peggy Joyce, who has known more millionaires than most girls ever see now engaged in the further devastation of France, via a romantic affair with that nation's sugar king, has just artistically extracted $500,000 from a Chicago gent, without the use of firearms or a pistol.

THE UNKNOWN WARRIOR

Brought home to take his final sleep at Arlington. How long ago, with busy shovels flying, They covered him with ground that he had won. There in the darkness and the silence lying, No more to know the glory of the sun. "Unknown" they wrote upon the cross above him, Named for the legion where the dream is just. Now he is back among the mates who love him, Home from the front at last. Here is the peace that passeth understanding. The peace that he had waited thru the years. No more grief explains of the strife commanding. Worn boots to change the battlement of tears. No more the heartache of a gyan endeavor. Into the storm of bitter battle drawn. Deep falls the night where winds come whispering. "Never, Never another dawn." Never another dawn where to eyes weary The gray light steals upon the sleeper's rest. The tramp of feet, the call of bugle dreary. To end the dream or stir the dreamer's breast. Never another dawn with strife's tomorrow. The day is done—the last lone cough awails. Here at the Road's End of all strife and sorrow. Safe through the twilight gates. —Grantland Rice in American Legion Weekly.

THE SPIRIT OF ARMISTICE DAY.

BELOW is a news story. It was written by a hard-working Associated Press correspondent as a part of his regular routine.

Because, with such simplicity, dignity, depth of feeling and yet with a certain note of buoyancy and gladness, it, to our mind, truly typifies the proper spirit of the day, it is printed as our Armistice Day editorial:

Home at last from France, an unknown American soldier was laid to rest today with all the homage a grateful people could pay.

For him a people stood at pause a little space, the rush and tumult of a nation's hurrying life stilled in reverence.

For him a president gladly trudged afoot through the streets, chief mourner to tell a people's proud sorrow for the dead.

For him admirals and generals and judges and statesmen flung off the weight of dignities and years to walk humbly with lesser folk and do him honor.

For the world's most precious tokens for the valiant were laid upon his bier; crosses and medals and ribbons and the tears of mourning mothers; comrades standing apart among men for their high-hearted courage alone might touch his casket; cannon roared him a last glorious salute.

And for him, a shattered, nameless body from some battle field in France where his great sacrifice was made, was provided a place for his long sleep that "kings for such a tomb could wish to die." Yet in it all, after all, there was little sorrow. There was pride and circumstance and the ordered movement of martial pageant; but over and under it all there was everywhere a note that spoke of the swelling spirit of brotherhood of the nation, the democracy that brought the highest and lowest shoulder to shoulder about the tomb of the unknown soldier who gave his all for the flag.

There was nothing lacking in the spectacle. From the moment when a November dawn peered in through the high windows of the capitol rotunda where the dead soldier lay in state, until the shock of a battery salute rocked the hills over the river to proclaim that the dead had come at last to his final rest, nothing that human mind could devise or human hands contrive to do this soldier honor, had been left undone.

NOVEMBER.

OCTOBER, cheerful month, is through, and now November O has the floor, and doubtless every day or two she'll hint that winter's at the door; she'll wail sad dirges down the flue, and make my spirit tired and sore. November has some nifty days, indorsed by pulpit and by press; she sometimes shows some winning ways, and makes the prophets miss their guess, but still the burden of her lays is always winter and its stress. We see November's sun arise, but do not cheer the goodly sight; we say, "You cloudlets in the skies portend a tempest that's a fright, and haply are the evening dyes our whiskers will be frozen tight." November browns the once green earth, and strikes the happy songsters dumb and sends the groundhog to his berth, convinced that things are out of plumb; she laughs, but in her hollow mirth we hear vague threats of ills to come. Ah, well, it can't be always June, the other months must have their turn; so let us drop the dirge-like tune, and all bleak thoughts and longings spurn; Thanksgiving will be with us soon, when gratitude's our chief concern.

Delightful Music in Marcus Show Sunday

The Marcus Show of 1921, which will be seen at the Pace theatre, Sunday matinee and night, November 13, will go down to fame as the most tuneful of the perennial extravaganzas up to now. Charlie Abot has produced some delightful numbers, among which "California" is the outstanding hit.

Bert Lytel will appear in "Ladyfingers", a picture entirely different from the ordinary run which will open at the Pace tomorrow. For those who prefer action and thrills as well as an interesting screen story, "Ladyfingers" is recommended. As an added attraction, Annette Kellerman's famous dives will be shown through slow motion pictures.

Harry Carey at Rialto

"Desperate Trails", a picture adopted from the famous Red Book story, "Xmas Eve at Pilot", supplies an opportunity for Harry Carey to act his best and Harry has taken advantage of it. This picture proclaimed by all of his admirers as his best, will furnish a full evening of thrills and enjoyment. It is a story of an escaped convict who played the game square and its human touch and action places it among the best of the season's productions. "Desperate Trails" was secured especially for Armistice Day and will play through Saturday.
