Proclamation

This country is nearing the conclusion of the period of readjustment after the great World war, and all activities,—commercial, industrial, and agricultural—are taking on a brighter aspect. The return to normalcy in wages, and prices is well under way, and optimism is getting the upper hand once more in the business world.

The Rogue River Valley has enjoyed unusual prosperity under existing conditions and it is proper that we should observe one day in the year, as a time on which we could feel and express our thanks for this prosperity.

Governor Olcott asks the people of this state to pause from their labors and render fitting thanks for the bounties and blessings bestowed upon them and their commonwealth, as well as their nation itself, on Thanksgiving Day.

We wish to express

Our Sincere Thanks and Appreciation
