

EXPECT VICTIM OF PICK-POCKET CUPID TO RETURN TODAY

Carl Anderson, the prospective want ad groom, whose ill-fated romance hit the rocks, when his bride-to-be walked off with his bill book containing $880, is due home today. According to the Portland Oregonian, the local man was somewhat dazed by the course of events, and complained to the Portland police:

"I can't understand it. I think I win a ranch in Montana, as she throw her arms around me and cry, 'Carl, I love you.'"

The happenings before the denouement are further described by the same paper, as follows:

The couple arrived at Vancouver yesterday morning and engaged separate rooms at the St. Elmo hotel. A short time later the bride-to-be evinced a keen desire to engage in a little shopping tour in Portland before the wedding. Andersen readily assented.

Anderson, too, was willing to "doll" up a bit for his wedding, he told Mr. Mowry. The woman he expected would soon become Mrs. Andersen helped him to select a shirt.

It was about that time she decided she wanted a pair of silk stockings. She gave voice to her desire.

"Here, buy yourself a suit, too, if you want it," Anderson said he replied to her. As he spoke, he reached in his inner pocket and pulled out his bill fold containing $880. Eager fingers clutched the fold as she smiled sweetly at him.

"You wait here and I'll be back in just a minute," she urged him as she darted up the aisle toward the hosiery department.

Anderson is still waiting. He hung around the shirt counter for more than an hour. Then he conducted a search through the store. Then suspicion overcame his confidence, and he rushed to police headquarters.
