

JUDGESHIP RACE NARROWED DOWN THOMAS-NEWBURY

Apparently the race for circuit judgeship at this spring's primaries will be between Attorneys Gus Newbury and Charley Thomas, unless all political dope is upset at the last moment and a dark horse is entered. As those eligible to the place must be lawyers, however, and as nearly all the lawyers in Jackson county have pledged their support to one of the two men, any 11th hour upset is not expected.

Attorney Newbury has in fact not definitely announced his intention of running, but it is generally understood that he will oppose Thomas for the republican nomination, and in political circles it is conceded that this will be a hot race, as both men are well known, popular and have many friends throughout the city and county.

With the announcement that Attorney P. J. Neff will not seek the democratic nomination, it is probable the democrats will look to Josephine county for an opponent to the republican choice at the fall election, although those democrats in Grants Pass recently approached have, it is said, shown no inclination to offer themselves for the sacrifice.

It has only been through the closest cooperation of these two companies that this interconnection has been made possible. The upper Willamette and Umpqua valleys, heretofore practically untouched by any power system, will now have available the water power resources of the state in advance of industrial and commercial development. The agricultural and timber resources of this vast territory will be made more accessible by the construction of this power line.

Pacific Gas and Electric company to the south, makes the California Oregon Power company one of the most important links in the interconnection of power lines which now reaches almost from Portland to San Diego, and will eventually embrace the entire Pacific coast.

Through the California Oregon Power Company's ability to install additional generating capacity in reasonably small units as needed, at an economical cost, the company will be a very important contributor to the pooled power resources of the Western states. Such pooling of power through interconnection means that all territories served, whether the large industrial centers or the more sparsely settled agricultural valleys, will have the same dependable and assured good service.

Local Company One of Largest

This is one more step forward by the California Oregon Power company as one of the major power utilities of the west. Through the enterprise of this organization, agricultural and industrial developments throughout the territory served by the company have been encouraged and assisted and the natural resources of the region have been economically developed and put to beneficial use.
