Today is Ground Hog day, according to the old weather folk lore when if the ground hog comes out and sees his shadow in the morning on arising he will decide that there will be six more weeks of winter and go back into his hole for that length of time. If he does not see his shadow on the morning of February 2nd, he will remain out figuring that spring is here. There is a difference of opinion as to whether his hogship saw his shadow today, as some early risers assert that the sun was up back of the foothills this morning for a short time, thus enabling any object to cast a shadow. However, the majority of Medfordites maintain the morning was cloudy.
