HENRY FORD FOR PRESIDENT.

DON'T laugh. This is serious. Henry Ford has been bitten by the presidential bug and is exhibiting all the preliminary symptoms of a severe case.

This fad is generally recognized in Washington. And while the "Higher-Ups" take it with a smile, no one denies that Henry has the makings of a strong contestant.

In the first place Henry doesn't need any money. That is a great advantage to start out with. He can tell Wall Street to go way back and sit down, and Wall Street will. Wall Street will be mad, but the people won't.

In the next place the senate seated Newberry, and Henry has a valid grievance. Anyone who questions how the American people would vote on the Newberry case, can know little of American psychology. Politically, Newberry is a marked man and a doomed man.

Then Ford understands the farmer and has something beside his tractor to offer. Henry is for lower freight rates and presents his own railroad to prove it. He is for cheap fertilizer and he points to his plans for Muscle Shoals to prove that. And although he is the richest man in the world today he still admits he knows nothing of history, cares nothing for art, and likes to call Mrs. Ford "Ma."

In short, he is "plain folks," and therefore, money instead of being a political handicap will be an asset. And Ford, although he ran for the senate on the Democratic ticket, is not a democrat. With that one exception, he has been a Republican all his life.

Last, but not least Ford has had a book written about him. This fact does not better his chances of being President, but it does strengthen the evidence that he wants to be.

The book is full of things like this: "Mr. Ford believes that wealth is a trust and strives to use it accordingly for the betterment of the workers."

That's enough. It's Presidentitis. A clear case.

VITAMINES.

ANOTHER great and helpful fad enchains the sons of men; eat cockleburs if you feel bad, and you'll be well again. For burrs are full of vitamins—whatever they may be—and from all symptoms and all signs of ill they'll set you free.

Stage and Screen

Larry Samon, Page A well known reviewer remarked in a magazine article some time ago that Larry Samon, if necessary, could make a funny picture with no other assets but a broomstick and a tin can. In making scenes for "The Bell Boy", which opens today at the Page theatre, Larry decided to play two parts. He decided to put it in, name of the characters assigned to the part did not come up to Larry's expectations. There he's no one else who seemed to fit in, Larry disappeared from the set and reappeared a half hour later in one of the funniest make-ups ever seen on a comedy set.
