"This winter has been one of the most severe for many years on livestock on the range in southern Oregon according to Supervisor E. H. MacDaniels of the Siskiyou national forest," says a news telegram from Grants Pass to the Portland Journal. "Mr. MacDaniels states that the snows are unusually deep and coming very late in the season when usually the snow is all gone from the lower hills and the grass in good condition. Many cattle and stock of all kinds in the Illinois and Applegate valleys are suffering severely as a result of the extremely heavy late snow in the mountains. All vehicular and automobile traffic between Grants Pass and Crescent City has been held up for a month and at last reports the snow was some 10 feet deep on Oregon mountain. The mails for the coast towns are packed over Oregon mountain, a distance of 11 miles, by horseback."
