Ye Smudge Pot

Filing for office under the idiotic Oregon system has been closed. The burning issues of the campaign will now start to burn. None of them will be worth squirting water on.

BE ACCOMMODATING

Tomorrow is Sunday. The weather promises to be such as to cause home tourists to eat the tail end of next week. There are three ways to get into a gas silo, but only one entrance to a grocereria. Woodrow Wilson has finally set down upon the egotistical political upstart, Joseph P. Tumulty, the private secretary of the world, and general regulator of humanity. Joe had an imaginary conversation with the ex-A. Lincoln the 2nd, which he used to further the presidential aspirations of James Middleton Cox, when the first named has a son-in-law who might be induced to accept the democratic nomination, if forced.

FRANK AND CANDID

(Yreka Journal)

There was a rodeo at Walker's Sunday afternoon. It didn't amount to much.

While cussing the weather fervently, remember that under ordinary conditions, an overwhelming majority of our leading social lions would be wearing white pants now.

STILL CAPTAIN OF HIS SOUL.

EX-PRESIDENT WILSON may be down, but he isn't out. He may be impaired in body, but he isn't impaired in will. His physical appearance may have changed, but his inner spirit is the same.

In the midst of all this confusion and unrest, these distressing gyrations of a topsy-turvy world, it is comforting and reassuring to note that one man,—and with all his shortcomings, a great man,—has in no essential particular changed.

This fact is amply demonstrated by the latest Wilsonian break,—this time with the faithful and ubiquitous Joe Tumulty.

Last Saturday night a message, ostensibly from Mr. Wilson, was delivered to the Democratic banquet. It was taken to New York by Mr. Tumulty. It said:

"Say to the Democrats of New York that I am ready to support any man who stands for the salvation of America, and the salvation of America is justice to all classes."

The message itself was innocent enough, but read with what apparently was a boom for James M. Cox, it created a sensation and was much resented by other factions of the party not sympathetic with the ex-governor's candidacy.

Mr. Wilson promptly took cognizance of the situation by writing a letter to the New York Times, a Democratic newspaper, with a request that the letter be published. It said:

"I did not send any message whatever to that dinner, nor authorize anyone to convey a message."

To this Mr. Tumulty responded yesterday.

"If Mr. Wilson says the message was unauthorized, then I can only say that I deeply regret the misunderstanding that has arisen between us. I certainly would not have given the message, if I had not believed it to be authorized."

That's all, but that's enough. It shows not only that "Richard is himself again," it shows that he was never anyone else.

It is a grim and melancholy figure sitting alone before the fireplace on "S" street. Colonel Harvey has gone, Lansing has gone, Colonel House has gone, Dudley Field Malone has gone, W. G. McAdoo has gone, and now the faithful "Joe," valiant and worshipping retainer in many a battle, and author of "Woodrow Wilson As He Knew Me,"—now Joe has gone.

There he sits alone. And once more the epithets will hurl about his head,—ingrate, autocrat, a mind without a heart, a brain without warm blood.

Perhaps. But in this present muddle of mush, with politicians palavering about this and that, buzzing about one thing to one man and another thing to another, in a wild scramble for votes, this gaunt figure, this uncompromising "Covenanter" with his one-track mind is at least refreshing.

Woodrow Wilson is Woodrow Wilson, which is more than many of his contemporaries can say, who are forever trying to be someone else. And so he will remain until the end,—a very lonely man, almost a friendless man, but a man who will halt at no sacrifice to friends or party to remain true to himself as God made him, and to his ideals.

Manicurists are not a recent development. Long years ago, the poet wrote: "There is a divinity that shapes our ends."

Seems an unwritten law of the banquet speaker fraternity that something or other must always "afford me great pleasure."

NATURE'S GIFTS.

NATURE took some soil and granite, and a tube of liquid glue, and she fashioned this, our planet, back a million years or two. And she made some lakes of water, strung them round with wondrous skill, so the thirsty gent might totter to the shore and drink his fill. Well she knew the human being would be thirsty every day, for Dame Nature is all-seeing, as he baled his share of hay. So she filled the lakes with water and the rivers with the same, and the little streams that potter through the fields, unknown to fame, and the sparkling rills that babble, and the ponds where lilies grow, where the ducklings quack and gabble while evorting to and fro. Nature knew that human critters must be moistened well within, but she filled no lakes with bitters and she made no streams of gin. And the rain that helps the cotter raise a bumper crop this year—it is always made of water, it is never made of beer. And the dew that shines so brightly in the morning, on the lawn, cooling off the tired world nightly, never knew a demijohn. When we're thirsty there are rivers, meres and brooks from which to choose, but Dame Nature ne'er delivers anything that's labeled booze.

Saints and Sinners

The Catholic Church cannot be choicy in its membership; it must accept all who desire salvation; it is not a congregation of saints exclusively. It also contains those whose lives perhaps are not at all edifying. But for them there is hope of salvation, and she urges on them repentance, and does not reject them. Christ said the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net, that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind. (Matt. 13, 47—Luke 9:32).

To the Editor: Please accept my commendation for the utterances you are making, and the stand you are taking against the lawlessness of unknown hands of masked men, and it seems to me there should be a move of good citizens started to put a stop to such things as this, and I find I am not the only one of that opinion either.
