The city council at its meeting Monday night, as predicted recently, it would do, decided to put down the use of sprinklers in commercial gardens of the city. A number of these gardens are equipped with from half a dozen to a dozen sprinklers, which they have been operating. The new edict limits the use of only two sprinklers at a time, and this rule, which goes into effect next Monday, it is thought will conserve a large part of the city's water supply and tend more to an equal distribution of that supply over the city. The council also decided to put on a special man during the summer season with police authority to watch out for all violators of the city water rules.

"The Passing Show of 1921," starring Wille and Eugene Howard, the big New York Winter Garden success, drew a capacity audience last night at the Page theater, which was in almost continuous laughter all the time the two Howards, those famous laugh makers, and Will Philbrick assisting comedian, were on the stage. The big production in its two acts and over 20 scenes is a merry hodge-podge of humorous stunts, clever dancing, comely young women and handsome costuming, pretty songs, burlesque and travesty acts, novel scenic effects and colorful scenery. The performance moved with a snap that was relished. Although much of the dialogue and stunts was very New Yorkish it did not go over the audience's head, especially the burlesque on popular plays as most of these had been seen in Medford, notably "The Bar" and "Irene."
