Fewer violations of the state traffic laws have been reported this year than for the past several years, according to the opinion of J. J. McMahon, state traffic officer, who was in Eugene last evening on his way south from Portland. McMahon covers the southern Oregon territory, including Jackson, Josephine and part of Klamath counties. The state officer states that the motorist public is showing a spirit of co-operation with the road officials for the observance of the highway laws and that this has had an effect on the diminishing number of complaints.—Eugene Register.
