

U. OF O. GEOLOGISTS TO VISIT OREGON CAVES ON MONDAY

Members of the University of Oregon geology summer camp, who have been camped on Griffin creek near the Geary orchards during the past two weeks, while examining fossiliferous areas and rock formations in the Siskiyou mountain range, on Monday will leave for the Oregon Caves to study the work of the underground waters, which have carved and moulded the famous "marble halls." Dr. Earl Packard, head of the geology department of the university and leader of the party of student geologists, is anxious to visit the caves at this time since fossil bones have recently been discovered embedded in the subterranean passageways. Dr. Packard is recognized as a paleontologist, having written several works dealing with prehistoric life.

According to Dr. Packard the trip to the caves will be made on foot by the entire group, unless members of the party can get in touch with motorists driving to the caves next week. The geologists will travel across the hills with light packs and expect to reach the caves in three days. The students will spend several days studying the caves and the adjoining territory and will return to Medford on July 8, the final day of the summer camp covering a period of three weeks.

Should the geologists find fossil animal remains in the caves, Dr. Packard has announced he will request the university to wire to Washington, D. C., for permission to excavate in the caves at this time. The university department of geology three years ago was granted a permit to conduct research work of a geologic nature in the Oregon Caves, but the departmental instructors were unable to use the permit.

Several new species of prehistoric life have been discovered by the geologists in their explorations of the Medford hills during the past two weeks, according to members of the party.

Chester Fitch, an orchardist who lives near Medford, has directed the university men to numerous fossil localities and has assisted them in finding interesting sections. Mr. Fitch, who is a college man, is interested in the natural sciences and has a varied collection of fossil life. Some sixteen new species of fossil life of the ancient Cretaceous seas have been found by the geologists since arriving in Medford, according to Dr. Packard.

The members of the geology camp other than Dr. Packard are J. H. Jantje, professor of chemistry and geology of Pacific college, San Jose, Calif.; Glenn Walkley, Jan Campbell, Ford Wilson, George Rizzo, Francis Linklater, and Phil Brogan.

Posing as the fox hunt of the O'Briens as a famous horseman and hunter, the experienced hotel "button" was given the honor of riding with the hounds on Dynamite, the meanest horse in the O'Brien stables.

Dynamite was guaranteed to throw anyone who attempted to mount him, and Harold Lloyd soon found it out. But what chance has a poor horse when the wit of Lloyd start working? Lloyd mounted that horse and—thereby hangs the tale of what happened to one who was "Among Those Present" by mistake.

An up-to-the-minute melodrama with one of those always-effective surprise twists at the end of the last reel, in the dramatic contribution of the Page double bill.

"What Women Will Do" is the title of the play.

"Forever" Scores Big
George Fitzmaurice's production, "Forever," based on George Du Maurier's celebrated novel, "Peter Ibbotson," starring Elsie Ferguson and Wallace Reid, has scored a decided hit at the Rialto theatre this week. It is a captivating picture, beautifully produced. She last showing will be to day. There is no droller comedienne on the screen than Mabel Normand and in her newest comedy, "Head Over Heels," coming to the Rialto theatre for three days, beginning tomorrow matinee, she is seen at her drollest and most laugh-provoking. It's a whirlwind theatrical love story in which athletic Mabel plays the part of a little Italian acrobat. It has the most contagious fun of the season's screen comedies.
