A LADY TALKS

For two years that I know of, Elsie has hankered for a manicure set, and to shut her up and because it was Christmas, I buys her one of them pocket floggers that had a file, and scissors, and et cetera, in a blue plush box, that cost $3.75, and what does I do but drop the same, and go six jumps before I halt and turn around just in time to see a lady pick it up, and put it into her bushel basket she thinks is a handbag. The minute I set eyes on that female, I knew she had been hit with a lapse of memory, but I said to her, not rough:

I beg your pardon. What you just picked up belongs to me, and it's Elsie's from Santa Claus.

"To whom do you refer," she says.

I says, I refer to what you just stooped over and picked up, and which does not belong to you, as I paid for it, and, if you don't believe me, ask the clerk, but he was gone, too.

Then she says: "I am at a loss to understand. I have not stooped over today. You are far too hasty in accusing strangers of theft. I do not care for any more words with you. Good day!"

Such is Fate, and somebody back East will get what belongs to Elsie, in their sock, and I'll bet the old girl got all out of wind rushing home to put a clean doilie under the Bible, on the table in the front room, to square herself with her conscience, after pulling an atrocity like that, and so would I, believe me.

WHEREIN, OFF CRUSHED TRUTH

ENDEAVORS TO GET UP
(Salem Capital Journal)

If professions were really governed by the codes of ethics they adopt, this might be the case, but the ordinary professional man pays as much attention to the code, except where it increases profits, as the average Christian pays to the doctrines of Christ.

King Constantine of Greece, is coming to America to abide, owing to tropical conditions at home, and will be handy, in case the surplus of native nuts decide to establish a monarchy, for the present defective form of government.

CALIFORNIA IS FALLING DOWN.

CALIFORNIA is a great state. The people of Southern Oregon are particularly ready to hand it to their big and wealthy neighbor on the south.

But in one direction,—and a most important one,—Oregon is beating California a city block. That is in the direction of completing the Pacific Highway.

Some time ago there was a meeting between highway officials of Oregon and California on the state line. A project to complete the Pacific Highway was duly commemorated, there were speeches and much enthusiasm. The representatives of California shook hands with the representatives of Oregon and made the proud boast that California would get to the state line with a paved highway, first.

With its well-established reputation of doing big things in a big way, everybody believed California would make that boast good. But they didn't. They haven't. Oregon not only reached the state line with a paved road first, but has its highway from Portland practically completed, while the road on the other side of the mountains is still in the air, or in the mud, whichever you may prefer.

The fault does not lie with the people of Northern California. They have done everything in their power to get this road completed. The state commission has agreed to advertise for bids on paving from Yreka to Grenada, and the grading and widening of the road from Klamath river to the Oregon line, but no paving for this latter and most important unit has been provided for.

In short 109 miles from the Oregon line to Redding will remain unpaved even when the paving from Yreka to Grenada is completed.

This failure on the part of the state of California to make good not only reflects upon the reputation of that state, but works a serious injury upon Oregon, particularly Southern Oregon. A coast highway is in a certain sense no stronger than its weakest link, and until California completes her part of the contract, Oregon's fine highway naturally must suffer, and the business of the state must suffer. The state of California suffers also, for the completion of a paved highway to San Francisco would mean a tremendous motor traffic from Oregon south every day in the year, but particularly in the winter.

California should complete its Pacific Highway. Laterals can wait the main trunk line can't wait. It is time California was awakened to the value of its reputation and the danger of losing it.

COURAGE.

WHEN Mrs. Spick, a neighbor dame, had lost her muley cow, I called to say it was a shame, but said that dauntless frau, "Why worry? 'Twill be all the same a hundred years from now." It was for her a grievous loss; she sold some milk and cheese, which helped to buy the Worcester sauce, the wiener, toast and teas; but patiently she bears her cross, and smiles at fate's decrees. Her logic's such as pagans write, that much I must allow; but still it makes her outlook bright, and soothes her furrowed brow; her griefs will be forgotten quite, a hundred years from now. And so will yours and so will mine, and those of every man, and putting up a feeble whine is but a catiff's plan; our eyes should waste no precious brine throughout life's little span. It is in vain to cry, "Alas," to raise a sinful row; like stubble all life's ills will pass beneath time's speeding plow; your choicest woe will cut no grass a hundred years from now.

SEA SHORE YARN

Sailor Malloy's empty wallet made him sorry as could be.
Till a pilot said to Malloy: "See that mullet in the sea."

"With a bullet we could kill it; we could fill it full of lead; And we'd grill it in a skillet and eat mullet," Malloy said.

So they shot it in the palate with a bullet and it died.
It was deadlier than a mallet, so they split it down the side.

And what was in its gullet? Well, to hear the pilot tell it.
In the gullet of the mullet was a pullet full of millet.
