There was some blustery weather for a short period early last evening, during which there was a fall of .65 of an inch of snow and rain—mostly rain, which melted the snow fast. However, considerable snow fell in the mountains and high foothills last night, especially to the east and south-east in which section the fall was visible today from the city. In Ashland there was a light snowstorm yesterday afternoon, and more snow fell there during the night. A railroad man arriving from the south in the city this morning said that there was four inches of snow on the ground in Ashland. This report could not be verified.
