

Local and Personal

The prediction of a light to heavy frost for tonight is rather disconcerting for the orchardists. In addition, the prediction is for unsettled weather to-night and Thursday with probable showers, and with cooler temperature tonight. Up to this morning all of an inch of rain had fallen during the 24 previous hours.

The Ashland Daily Tidings which is appearing in abbreviated form without advertisements publishes the following apology to its readers: "Because it will take us a few days to secure linotype operators and printers, and not having anyone about the office who can set type, the Daily Tidings will be reduced to two pages and will carry very little local news for a few days. We will be unable to take any local ads until we get some men to set them. We hope to have our new organization formed by the last of the week and with the installation of our new linotype, doubling our typesetting capacity, will be able to give Ashland a better daily than ever, beginning early next week. We ask patrons to bear with us a few days in this crisis. However, in the meantime no issue will be missed if we can prevent it."
