POLES WILL TEAR DOWN CATHEDRAL TO SPITE RUSSIA

WARSAW, April.—During the Russian regime a Russian cathedral was erected in Warsaw. Richly decorated with paintings and wonderful mosaics, it was an object of admiration of all foreigners who visited the city. To the Poles, however, it was but another symbol of Russian oppression.

When, in 1915, the Russians withdrew from Warsaw, the first impulse of the populace was to destroy this cathedral, but other counsel prevailed. The Germans in their occupation of Warsaw, stripped it of its bronze roofs, which they replaced with wooden ones. But these roofs afforded poor protection against the weather, and it was soon found necessary to close the cathedral.

Owing to its present dilapidated condition and the reluctance of the Poles to spend money on the restoration of a monument which has always been hateful to them, it has been decided that it shall be pulled down. Before starting on the actual demolition of the cathedral, however, other more pressing works will be taken in hand, so that the delay will give a little hope to those who are against its destruction.
