SAYS MIDDIES MUST WORK BELOW DECKS

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12.—There is bad news for the midshipmen in a report submitted to the navy department by Rear Admiral Newton A.

McCulley, commanding the scouting fleet. Indicating his opinion that the average academy student does not acquire the familiarity he should with things below decks, the admiral recommended that on future practice cruises, the regular crews of all training ships be replaced by middies. The suggestion has met the objection that the morale of the regulars might suffer by their being left ashore so long away from their routine tasks, but Admiral McCulley believes this can be avoided if the men spend the period in taking up trade courses at the Hampton Roads base schools.
