SCHNEIDAU AND THYE WRESTLE TO HOT FOUGHT DRAW

Ted Thye of Portland, and Gus Schneidau, now of these parts, wrestled two hours Tuesday night at the Armory, to a bitterly contested draw. It was the best and most exciting athletic contest seen in southern Oregon in many a day, and was filled with thrilling situations.

They secured the first fall in one hour and 24 minutes, with an arm strain, and Schneidau secured the second fall in 22 minutes with a crotch hold. The arm strain consisted of endeavoring to yank that portion of the anatomy out by the roots, and the crotch hold, consists of standing the victim on his head, and putting his shoulders on the mat, by throwing the weight of the aggressor, where it will do the most good. Neither holds are ladylike.

Both the contestants got real mad at each other, with but 34 minutes to go, and glared and grunted at each other ferociously, Schneidau shaking Thye's head in a headlock like it was a dishrag. Neither could keep a hold, and when time was called, they stood, and glared, chest to chest, and the parting handshake was far from cordial, both waiting for the other to make the first move. A rougher match was never held in the valley, and the fans seemed to enjoy it.

Schneidau had a slight advantage in weight, and his foot was hurt when flopped to the floor, just before the first fall. Thye also discovered that his opponent was ticklish, and Schneidau came right back by stamping his feet, and making some horrible faces. Schneidau's display of temper, when the battle became hot, was feigned, his friends said afterwards, for the purpose of making Thye open up, but failed of their purpose. The elbow and thumb was used by both, along with all the holds known to wrestling science.

The bout was held under the auspices of the American Legion, and drew a medium sized crowd, but deserved a full house.
