

HARDING EULOGY BY PRESIDENT IS RADIO TRIUMPH

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 11.—The memorial services by radio for the late President Harding started last night by air.

Introduction by the radio announcer as follows:

On June 20th, Warren G. Harding, president of the United States started across the continent and to this country's most northern territory to establish closer contact with the people whom he loved so dearly. Back in Ohio he liked nothing better than to be called neighbor and it was in this spirit of neighborliness of our 119,000,000 people that he undertook the arduous journey from which he was destined never to return.

On his deathbed in San Francisco, he was counseled by his physician, General Charles E. Sawyer, to be patient. His reply was, "I have been nothing but patient since I became president." It was one of the strongest tenets of his creed, patience with human woes and failings.

The last and ripest had hardly been solemnized in Marion early last August when loving admirers in several parts of the country began advocating that a fitting memorial be established to the great chiefman who so acutely felt the needs of America and gave unstintingly of his energy to provide the remedy.

These spontaneous movements centralized in the Harding Memorial association, a self-perpetuating body, headed by Mr. Harding's successor, President Calvin Coolidge.

This association decided upon a three-fold memorial: A suitable mausoleum, purchase and preservation of Mr. Harding's home and the creation of a Warren G. Harding chair of diplomacy and functions of government in some central university. The Harding home will become a national shrine. It will house all the mementos and souvenirs associated with his life.

To fulfill these projects the Harding Memorial association is seeking three million dollars by popular contribution. You may make your donation through your church, club, lodge, local chairman or any state or national bank. Contributors of one dollar or more will receive a handsomely engraved certificate which will bear the individual name of the donor.

This is Harding Memorial Week, during which committees throughout the United States will make a determined effort to raise the amount needed.

It is in connection with Harding Memorial Week that President Coolidge has consented to speak to you direct this evening by means of the radio on the character and attainments of his dear friend and predecessor.

Be silent, please.

The President of the United States, President Coolidge's eulogy of President Harding, broadcasted by radio last night follows:

One of the brief poems that have touched the hearts of men is that wherein Leigh Hunt tells of the visit of an angel to earth, recording the names of "those who love the Lord."

"And is my name there?"

"Nay, not so," replied the angel.

"Then write me down," he was told,

"as one who loves his fellow men."

The angel came again to show his list of those who love the Lord.

"And lo!" the name of him who loved his fellow men "led all the rest."

It will be hard to find a better picture than this of President Harding, the man we loved and mourn. He loved his fellow men, and because they felt it and knew it, they loved and trusted him. His whole life, from the knee of that cherished mother who had an inspired faith in him, down to the day when a sorrowing world laid its tributes at his bier, was a continuing testimony to his devotion to them and to their faith in him.

Some will say that such a sweet and gentle nature could only have found its setting and its opportunity for service in a strange and peculiar time. Perhaps they are right. Yet he came to the world's stage in an hour when it seemed set for other characters. The aptitudes and the kings, the armies and the navies, the men who would have war, and the men who would not have peace, had long dominated the scene. Where among them could place be made, could ear be found, for this kindly, gentle soul?

Yet he found his place. He caught the ear of a war-tired world. He called our country back to paths of peace and gladly it came. He beckoned the nations to come and sit in council. He pointed them the way to peace. He set example of readiness to cast away the sword from the arm of night. He sought for men and nations a peace—the only true and lasting peace—based on justice and right. He stood first and firm for his own country, then for mankind. His sincerity and frankness won to his side those who sensed the great truth of human brotherhood. So he led the way to the monumental accomplishments of the Washington conference on limitation of armament.

The same simplicity and directness marked his program in domestic affairs. His was the steady, strong, inspiring hand of guidance and helpfulness. It was never the mailed fist of compulsion. He knew that the greatest need of the world was peace with industry and production. He asked for these, and with them for thrift and the will to make good the losses that had been inflicted in the years of strife. He called his countrymen to set an example of these homely virtues, and they did. He gave without remorse of his own strength, down to the tragic end. He rose above misunderstandings and misrepresentations, but he was curiously incapable of hard feeling toward those who were unfair with him. In a time when the minds of many men were prone to seize upon hurried conclusions, he held back and dared to take his time and thought before deciding.

He was free from the pride of opinion, but strong in the determination of conviction. He had that calm courage which could not be over-pressed, but that was firm and final when decision had been reached.

He was criticized because his own country, under his leadership, did not move forward so fast as some wished. But when worn out by the struggle he had so bravely borne, he laid down the burden, his critics saw clearly what his leadership had accomplished. They saw that it had been a leadership forward and upward, in an era when most other countries were moving backward and downward. They saw that prosperity smiled once more on a favored land.

They saw that prosperity and material well-being were somehow strange by rare in other lands. So they came to realize what his modest, unassuming leadership had wrought for his country.

It was natural that such a character, passing from the stage of life, should leave the multitudes a sense of personal loss. Seldom indeed has any man's death left that feeling among so many. He was mourned abroad and at home. The conviction was felt everywhere that he was one of the men best fitted to serve a distracted world in a difficult period of its history.

But he was not permitted to finish his task. He broke and went down under its load. In the hour of sorrow for his loss, men and women were moved to a broader charity, a relaxation of partisan excesses, a determination to be fair and moderate and reasonable. His life became, in the tragic sorrow of its end, a lesson in the value of simple and modest ways.

We mourn him today, and we shall mourn him as the picture of his patience, forbearance, faith and Christian tolerance. These are rare virtues, too seldom found among the men who have the strength to rise to high places. They are the virtues that men need to seek and cultivate in these years of stress in the world. They point the way to salvation for men, for nations, for humanity itself. We may well hope that his example to his countrymen and to the world, may help greatly to bring a spirit of charity, accord and true fraternity, whereby shall be lighted the lamp of understanding to show our feet into the paths of peace on earth, good will to men. We may well consider by what means we can show our appreciation, and by what method we can best enshrine his memory.

Girls Should Save, Too

Seventy per cent of the buying done in retail stores of the United States is done by women. Some authorities have claimed even a higher percentage.

That seems a pretty good reason, doesn't it, why our girls should be taught thrift and industry and the value of money?
