MR. McADOO,—INNOCENT, BUT UNLUCKY

WILLIAM G. McADOO, is indignant. On the stand today, he maintained that if his name had not been prominently mentioned for high office, his association with Mr. Doheny would never have been considered by the senate committee. Partisan politics, Mr. McAdoo blames, for the entire miserable performance.

Mr. McAdoo is quite right in being indignant, but he is quite wrong in blaming partisan politics for his predicament. The force behind the McAdoo exposure does not come from Republicans, but from democrats,—from those members of Mr. McAdoo's own party, who oppose his nomination.

This is personal not partisan politics. Republicans have been delighted and amused by the McAdoo incident, but they have not been working to defeat McAdoo's nomination by the Democrats. Probably the Republican leaders, under the circumstances, would like to see McAdoo chosen. The effort to grease the skids for McAdoo with Teapot oil, has come and comes today, from the Smith, Reed, Murphy, Taggart factions of the Democratic party.

And this is quite natural. Everyone can agree that as legal adviser of the Doheny oil interests in Mexico, the former Secretary of the Treasury as a lawyer in private practice, was well within his rights, and justified in getting as much money as Mr. Doheny would pay. When he resigned Mr. McAdoo frankly stated he did so because he wanted to make money. He proceeded to make it.

But what Mr. McAdoo could properly do as a private citizen, and what he could properly do as a candidate for the presidency, were and are two different things. With the recent oil exposures as a certain issue in the coming campaign, with Mr. Doheny as one of the chief malefactors, the question is automatically reduced to the following political query—

"Does the Democratic party wish to choose as its standard bearer the chief legal adviser of the man who gave ex-Secretary Fall a check for $100,000?"

There is the entire situation in a nutshell. It is not a matter of partisan politics. It is a matter of democratic party policy. Mr. McAdoo has a right to be indignant, but not against the Republicans. His indignation should be directed principally against himself,—and Fate,—for having chosen a path to wealth which by an unforeseen chain of circumstances led to the precipice of political oblivion.

QUILL POINTS

Not every woman marries a man to reform him, but most of them try it later.

Act I: Save the world from Germany. Act II: Save the world by saving Germany.

It is possible to live on love, of course, if you are a politician and it is love of country.

The Bok peace plan seems especially puerile and silly to those who sent in other plans.

Naughtiness is comparative. Even the ladies who light up after dinner, frown on those who get lit up after dinner.

About the only difference is that upper class people are tired in the morning instead of at night.

A philosopher is a ham actor who thanks Heaven he didn't live back there when the dinosaur laid eggs.

When she gasps with wonder and tells him he is so big and strong, all that remains is the job of reeling in the line.

It doesn't follow that America is militaristic just because one army man cleans up Philadelphia and another cleans up in Wall street.

Correct this sentence: "I am always free from worry," said the wife, "when you are out for an evening with your wonderful men friends."

FEELING FINE.

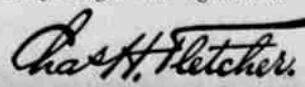

A RUIN HOAR is James B. Wax, he has a wooden knee; he sometimes wobbles in his tracks, from pain he's never free; but when I ask him how the stacks, "I'm feeling fine," says he. If he elected to repine and groan and tear his hair, if he sent up a frequent whine, to chide him none would dare; but he insists he's feeling fine, and right side up with care. So he's become a household word, and when we see him pass, we say, "Behold that grand old bird! He sounds no vain 'alas'; he makes all grumblers seem absurd, and in the ten cent class. For he has gutta pereha feet, and he must wear a wig, with wooden teeth he's doomed to eat the luscious prune and fig; and yet he finds existence sweet, and grand and fine and big. One eye he purchased at the store, the other's nearly blind; if he has bones that are not sore, they're mighty hard to find, and yet he holds that gent a bore who calls his life a grind. His ears are badly on the blink, he cannot smoke or chew, his sideboards always come out pink, which is a loathsome hue; he's treated hardly and you'd think he'd spring a sad hoo-hoo. But naught can daunt this festive wight, his vantage is ashine; though evils on his form alight, he won't take in his sign, and when you hail him, day or night, he says he's "feeling fine."

Learning Things Which Ain't So.

A correspondent describes a rather common and harmless condition in children which is called geographic tongue, from the map like marks which are seen on the tongue. She says "I took him to six doctors. None seemed to be able to tell me the cause or what it was. At last I took him to Dr. — the child specialist, who said nothing serious, called geographic tongue, didn't require treatment. But today while waiting in the dentist's office I started reading a dental magazine. It had an article describing such a tongue and said it was syphilis. Is that true? I am greatly upset about it."

A moral which may be drawn from the story is that laymen should leave medical literature severely alone for the best interest of their health and peace of mind. There is no mischief capable of working more havoc than an attempt on the part of the layman to study "doctor books" or to read descriptions of diseases or their symptoms. I believe it would be the part of wisdom for the layman to study or read nothing relating to disease or health unless the reading matter has been approved by his family physician. So much printed matter dealing with disease and health is wrongly inspired nowadays that it is really unsafe to put confidence in anything of the kind unless it has the sanction or approval of some properly qualified censor such as the family doctor.

Right away somebody will remark that some family doctors are incapable of passing intelligently upon such reading matter, since the doctors have not familiarized themselves with the great mass of printed matter dealing with these subjects. That is often quite true, but if the doctor has not and time nor inclination to investigate all the publications personally, he has available responsible sources of information. So has the lady in general. For example, anybody may send a query of this kind, along with a stamped envelope for the reply, to the American Medical Association, 535 N. Dearborn street, Chicago.

The dental magazine the correspondent picked up in the dentist's office was very likely one of a large class of wrongly inspired periodicals which are showered on doctors and dentists by all sorts of nostrum makers who hope in this way to sell more of their wares. One is more or less helpless against this evil. No wonder a mere patient in the dentist's office takes the stuff in such "magazines" seriously.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Far Worse Than a Dutch Treat.

I'd like to get a copy of your pamphlet at home.—Miss L. G.
 Answer—I have often quoted a pamphlet entitled "How I Won the Battle With Tuberculosis in My Own Home," which you may obtain by sending 5 cents to the Tuberculosis Society of Detroit and Wayne county, 316 Jefferson street, east, Detroit.

Mich., or free of charge if you reside in Wayne county. In this pamphlet the author, J. E. Stocker, tells how he won the fight under the care of his doctor, not how he treated himself. I have a letter dealing with tuberculosis and the way to recovery, which I shall be glad to send to any one who asks for it and encloses a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

All Out of Symptoms.
 (1) Give symptoms that may arise from infected tonsils: (2) Can this infection get into the blood? (3) If so, would a blood test detect it? (4) Would such infection in the blood cause heart disease?—A. W. L.

Answer—The purpose of this department being to help readers keep well, it would be unfortunate to equip a lot of readers with symptoms, wouldn't it? Infection from the tonsils may get into the blood that is the germs from the feet or nests in the infected tonsils may invade the blood stream and lodge in distant parts of the body, say upon the lining of the heart, setting up heart disease, or the lining of a joint, setting up joint inflammation (arthritis). I know of no blood test which would detect such a condition, unless perhaps the germs might be found by making a bacteriological culture from the blood.

Hernia.
 Is there any cure for hernia? How long a time is required?—I. A. G.

Answer—Yes. Generally two or three weeks of rest after the operation.

Skin Lotion.
 Please publish the directions for making the skin lotion you had in the paper a long time ago—a hand lotion to soften and whiten red and chapped hands. It was wonderfully effective.—Madge J.

Answer—Dissolve in a pint of water three drams of borie acid, two drams of glycerin and 60 grains of traganth shavings, boiling constantly till a thin clear jelly results; apply a little two or three times a day.

GOVERNMENT GRABS DUCKS IN STORAGE

Letters from the state game warden's office in Portland have been received by a number of sportsmen in Medford and Ashland containing releases to be signed by them for the wild ducks and geese that they were keeping in the various cold storage places in town, as these birds were confiscated by the government.

This action was taken as the result of a state law covering all migratory birds so that they could be kept in cold storage no later than January 15.

On January 27th, Ray Street, U. S. game warden arrived in Medford and inspected all the cold storage places and noted the names of those who had game there and has since sent them these notices of confiscation.

This law is little known in the valley and is exciting some comment among sportsmen.

LAUREL CRAW LOVE GOSSIP

THE GREATEST THING IN THE WORLD
 by Laurel Craw

A missive of my acquaintance whispers confidentially that she's not going to marry her Lord Jim. "No!"

—this is my surprise for I know the child is mad about him. "No," she said, slowly, "and I am afraid you are going to think me hard and mercenary. But the truth is, Lord Jim is earning only $2800 a year. He likes his job, too, and that's the trouble. I don't believe he would ever leave the firm, and I know they will never pay him more than $5000 a year—and that will be years from now." How in the world can a marriage be a success on less than $100 a week? She looked at me a little ashamedly, because she feared I would scold. But Wanda is quite right—if that is the way she feels about Lord Jim. If she loved him as much as she must love a man who is going to be her husband, she wouldn't stop to think about the things she must go without on $2800 a year? It is true that Wanda cannot have a Rolls-Royce, but I know at least one young matron in this town who has a Rover, who would gladly exchange it for a flivver coupe if she could have a Lord Jim with all Lord Jim's winsome ways with it. Money does not bring happiness. Poverty is a terrible handicap for love in a cottage to survive; I dolefully admit that. It isn't right for a man to ask a girl to marry him if he cannot support her in comfortable style. It is not fair for a girl to fix a luxurious idea of existence of ease and idleness in her mind as a necessary adjunct of marriage. "I cannot cook or keep house worth a cent," said Wanda, a little bit brazenly. What would Wanda think of a fellow who said with equal boldness: "I cannot support you, honey, but I think we ought to be married?"

 If elected I shall upon and expect to maintain the right to perform all the duties of Sheriff in this county, and it follows that I will be uncompromisingly opposed to special officers except Federal Agents, with whom I pledge full and complete cooperation. I am in thorough accord with both the letter and spirit of the prohibition laws and pledge my active and untiring efforts in their enforcement.

 I am a candidate for the republican nomination for a second term as Treasurer of Jackson county, subject to the May primary. If nominated and elected, I will conduct the office as in the past, in accordance with the laws of the state.
