LOCAL SEASON IS FAR ADVANCED SAYS C. C. CATE

C. C. Cate, county agent for Jackson, who is in Salem from Medford today, states that fruit growers in that district will make no effort to form a county wide association, following abandonment of the fresh fruit end of the business by the Oregon Growers' association, but that plans are being formulated there for the organization of a packing corporation to pack the fruit for the growers, which in turn will sell individually.

"The season in the Rogue river valley is very much advanced," said Cate. "Unless there is some radical change in the situation we should come out of the winter by the latter part of March instead of the middle of April as usual."

"The pear crop in the valley is pretty well cleaned up, and while growers did not do as well as in some years, fair returns were had. The apple crop is slower and there is something of a carry over. The apple crop, however, does not cut as much figure down there as the pear crop, and we expect to have it cleaned up with the spring."—Salem Capital Journal.

CARRIER PIGEON IS BLACK HAND TOOL

NEW YORK, Feb. 29.—A carrier pigeon was delivered yesterday to William Borheek, wealthy Long Island merchant, with a note that unless he tied $1000 to the bird's leg and placed it in his life would be in danger. Police, notified of the unusual blackmail attempt, said today they would release the pigeon and have it trailed by an airplane.

A taxicab drove up to the store, of which Borheek is a proprietor, about noon yesterday. The chauffeur entered the store and told a floorwalker he had a box "for the boss, Mr. Borheek," which he handed to the employee and then drove away.

The floorwalker delivered the box to his employer, who, opening it, found the pigeon trussed up, but bright-eyed with a pouch attached to one leg. Then Borheek noticed the note, which was unsigned and said: "Unless you deliver $1000 immediately by this bird your life will be in danger."

DAUGHERTY SHIELDED PALS

Its adoption is expected before tonight and the inquiry will begin next week.

Controversy at once developed over the question of appointing the investigating committee. Senator Wheeler, democrat, Montana, author of the resolution, proposed that five senators, three republicans and two democrats, be selected by the senate.

Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, the republican leader, countered with a proposal for appointment of the committee in the customary manner by the senate's presiding officer.

Senator Robinson of Arkansas, the democratic leader, supported the plan for election of the special committee by the senate, declaring "it had been openly declared that efforts were contemplated to pack the committee," he added that he had reason to believe that Senator Cummins of Iowa, the president pro tem, did not desire to name the committee.

Declaring that all he wanted was a fair and impartial investigation, Senator Wheeler charged that Attorney General Daugherty had sought to "intimidate" senators by saying that if some of them did not resign he would have an important statement to make.

Senator Wheeler also declared the attorney general already apparently had intimidated "the man at the White House, because we all know that his resignation would be acceptable to the president."

"We all know," added Senator Wheeler, "that the president for some unknown reason hasn't stamina to ask for that resignation."

"The traditions of the senate," Senator Lodge argued, "required that the presiding officer should receive from the senate every mark of personal respect," and should not be curtailed in his customary privilege of naming the members of the special committee.
