If the mineral properties of Oregon were in Alaska or the Orient or South America, there would be plenty of money ready to develop them, but the grass is always greener in the other fellows' yard and that is why the Oregon possibilities are neglected—they are too near home to have the glamour of romance and adventure," asserted a mining engineer in the Hotel Portland lobby yesterday. "The United States geological survey states that the greatest mineral belt in the United States is in the Grants Pass district. I know, for example, that a big concern made an offer of $10,000,000 a year ago for copper property in southwestern Oregon, but the title is tied up in litigation and so no sale can be made because of warring owners, and this prevents the development of the property. Gold, there is a plenty and some time a profitable way will be devised for extracting the gold from the black sand."—Oregonian.
