

SCHOOL SITE IS ABSORBING TOPIC THROUGHOUT CITY

The warm fight on the school site question has reached the campaign button stage, as a number of men and women of the city wear such buttons today on which appeared the slogan "The P. & E. for Me," which were furnished presumably by citizens who favor that site as against the Holly street site.

Already, although the special site election will not be held until next Friday afternoon the question is the leading topic of conversation and debate, both on the streets and in the places of business and homes.

The map, which is being shown in the Weeks & Orr furniture store window and which seemingly much favors the Holly street site, attracts much attention and is the cause of much debate on the part of its viewers. This map sets forth figures and comments, among which appears the assertion that 29 per cent of the school population resides east of Bear creek. This statement especially starts debates, as do the old-time photographs of Bear creek floods. It seems that hardly any two of the pioneer citizens of Medford agree on whether the waters of Bear creek, in years gone by, ever flooded the Pacific and Eastern sites.

For years the recognized dividing line between the east and west sides of the city has been the railroad tracks. Inquiry of school authorities today developed the fact that the high school attendance from the east and west sides is fifty-fifty.

The report is in circulation that the map above referred to was made by Aubrey Smith, superintendent of schools, between whom and the majority of the school board it has been publicly known for a long time past there is no love.

Wherever one sees a group of men in earnest conversation in the business district, the school site is almost sure to be the subject under discussion. Some of the discussions are amusing to an outsider listening, as some of the radical adherents of each site give forth in their zeal a quantity of astounding statements, being influenced more by prejudice than facts.

Despite the threatening weather of yesterday afternoon between forty and fifty citizens, men and women, visited the two sites where there were two members of the school board present at each to give information.
