ROSENBERG BROS. BRING OUT NEW PATENTED BUCKET

Rosenberg Bros. are this year bringing out a new patented picking bucket, claims of which are that it incorporates the protective qualities of the picking sack and the speed of the picking sack. For many years the principal of careful picking has been generally realized, but the fact that the buckets now found on the markets have not been conducive to speed has caused many growers to turn to the old style picking sack. However, the Rosenbergs feel that they have finally been able to develop a picking device which handles pears just as easily as possible, and at the same time picks conservatively 10 per cent faster than the bucket type. Last year this bucket was developed on the Bear Creek orchard where it showed a saving to the orchard of 30c per bushel per day. As a result they are placing this new bucket on the market this year. Speaking to Mr. Rosenberg, he says "The day of the slap-bang picking sack idea of harvesting pears is completely past. In order for any one to compete, it is necessary to get the fruit to the buyer as nearly perfect as it was while hanging on the trees. Anyone who takes the liberty of bruising and ruining his fruit before it even reaches the market is in no position to complain if his fruit cannot stand the test of competition, and the consequently lower prices. Price-making starts, first, with quality fruit, and secondly in getting this fruit to the market with the same quality with which nature grew it. One of the very important overlooked is the rough, poor, picking which is exemplified by the use of the picking sack idea."
