

Local and Personal

A heavy black smoke ascending skyward in the vicinity of the Natorium was noticed by many on the streets this forenoon with casual interest, but it was for some one to be more than casually interested, for a fire alarm was telephoned in about 11 a. m. with the information that an oil fire was blazing at the Natorium. The fire department responded, only to discover that Walter Merrick was merely burning waste oil on gravel near the creek. Many felt relieved, for they had feared that the big Natorium was in flames.
