Mrs. Wait explained that her father always passes upon the cocktail tray. "But he holds very sensible views upon modern manners," she said. "This generation is not going to the dogs. The present day girl is as wholesome and pure as her predecessor of the seventles.

"But I am utterly against indiscriminate drinking and pajama parties for boys and girls. They are too young and impulsive. If I had a daughter in her teens, I would not let her go to parties before she was sixteen. Until 18 she would have a chaperone. After that I would let her go out alone to a reasonable hour. Young men should be allowed less freedom than girls, for they are more dangerous than girls when gadding around on the loose."
