MISPLACED SYMPATHY

Explorer [illegible]
Some day will be spillin'
An epic of chilblains and woe,
For pole seeking glory
In spinning a story
Of struggles with icebergs and snow.
They tell how their noses
Get redder than roses
And freeze till they're brittle as glass,
And icicles dangle
From whiskers at Wrangle
Like sleet on the bushes and grass.
They make people creepy
And cuticle creepy
At thought of the hardships they bear.
These gents who get rigid
Exposing the frigid
In spite of the clothing they wear.
But shucks! Why not pity
The folk in the city
Who stay in the sweltering heat
And misery is full and complete?
'Tis these need compassion,
Not those who go dashin'
In search of a silly old pole;
They choose to be chilly
But we, willy-nilly,
Must stay in this heat-blistered hole. (Baltimore Sun.)

JUST BEFORE THE BATTLE,—JOCKO!

WITH the much advertised test of the Anti-Evolution law about to begin, it might be well to know what that law is. The statute reads:

> Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Tennessee that it shall be unlawful for any teacher in any of the universities, normal and all other public schools of this state which are supported in whole or in part by the public school funds of this state, to teach any theory that denies the story of the divine creation of man as taught in the Bible, and to teach instead that man was descended from a lower order of animals.

Evolution, it will be noted, is not mentioned. Nor is there any mention of apes or monkeys. As the trial progresses it might be well to keep these two facts in mind, for the wording of the law will undoubtedly be of supreme importance in the [illegible] legal battle.

Does the teaching of Evolution for example, deny the story of Divine Creation? Mr. Bryan says it does. But we notice the Encyclopedia Britannica says it does not. To quote the latter:

> "Evolution, therefore, is a method of growth, not a philosophy of Nature. It does not deal with the ultimate nature of reality. It starts at a given point with an existing substance or order of life. Whether this is eternal or was created, whether it is the last analysis material or spiritual, Evolution does not ask. As a process or method of development it may be accepted therefore equally by Theist, or Agnostic, Materialist or Idealist."

Whether the Encyclopedia or Mr. Bryan is right, of course, the jury in Dayton will have to decide.

There is another very important phrase in the law, namely schools which are supported in whole or in part by the public school funds of this state.

In other words this law, as framed, does not prohibit the teaching of any theory opposed to that of "Divine Creation" in private universities, private or religious schools, but only in the public schools. So the Tennessee resident who wishes to give his children a liberal education can do so by the simple expedient of paying for it.

Meanwhile, it might be well to again observe that this Dayton trial is going to settle nothing, and aside from its value as a publicity stunt is doomed to futility.

Ben Franklin hit the nail on the head many years ago when he said:

> "My spiritual beliefs are matters which have only to do with my God and myself. No outside force, civil or political, has a right to interfere with them as long as I do not injure my fellow man by so believing."

There stood Ben and there, we believe, most of us stand. Regardless of jury verdicts, regardless of court decisions, freedom of opinion will endure.

Those who believe in Evolution will continue so to believe and those who don't will also so continue, and both will be absolutely right and merely exercising one of the primary privileges of free American citizenship.

For this question is not one of deeds, nor even primarily, of thoughts but of feelings,—of belief,—of faith,—and a man's belief is something nothing can change but himself.

Rippling Rhymes by Walt Mason

VACATION TIME.

SOME are going to the mountains, some are going to the shore, some are going where the fountains spurt ice water evermore; far away the fields are greener and the atmosphere is cleaner, and you get a better weiner for your money at the store. Hope's transfiguring our faces, for vacation time is nigh, and we'll seek the open spaces underneath a smokeless sky, where the fresh and wholesome breezes are not loaded with diseases, and where each prospect cheers and pleases while the golden moments fly. Let us not forget, however, that the open spaces hold many insects smooth and clever, many bugs severe and bold; there the hornets oft are winging, and the bumble bees are stinging, and mosquito hosts are singing melodies we knew of old. Let us pack our old valises with such salves as granny made, with such unguents and greases as will make a swelling fade; have an extra mustard plaster to provide against disaster, and a poultice that will master sprain of leg or shoulderblade. Foolish is the man who throttles prudent promptings ere he goes, who neglects to take in bottles liniments and things like those; who is shy of healing lotions, who is supplied with potions when he goes to see the oceans and the mountains capped with snows. For the glad free open spaces are the home of biting things; there the fierce sidewinder chases, and the hornets ply their stings; and the man who takes a wagon full of dope in jar and flagon circumvents the bug and dragon, and he dances and he sings.

How To Keep Cool

The heat which is produced in the body by the combustion of fuel (food and body tissues) is disposed of by (1) the warming of the air, food and water intake; (2) the vaporization of water and the setting free of carbon dioxide in the lungs; (3) the evaporation of water from the surface of the body; (4) the radiation and conduction of heat from the surface of the body, and (5) a small amount lost in excretions other than sweat. This does not include the heat equivalent of muscular work. We sometimes compare the efficiency of the human machine with that of the gasoline motor. I do not know what proportion of the caloric energy of gasoline the motor converts into work, or what proportion of the caloric energy of coal the steam engine converts into work. Here is an estimate of the efficiency of the human machine, by Atwater:

The mean of 30 experiments with a man at work, comprising 66 days, showed (1) heat loss by radiation and conduction, 3,340 calories daily; (2) heat loss in kidney and intestinal excretions, 46 calories; (3) heat loss by evaporation from lungs and skin, 859 calories; (4) heat equivalent of muscular work, 430 calories, or rather less than 10 per cent of the calorie energy in the fuel consumed.

The cooling of the human machine is therefore a very important matter, and you will notice that the cooling is chiefly effected from the surface of the body.

An individual lying at rest naked in a room with an air temperature of 41 degrees Fahrenheit and air current of 5 yards a minute for 3½ hours lost heat at the rate of three calories a minute, contrasted with only 1½ calories when the temperature of the air was 88 degrees Fahrenheit. The moral is go naked and keep cool, or if you can't keep cool that way, then go as nearly naked as you cooly can. Aside from the comfort and efficiency of the question, it is healthful in all respects to keep as cool as possible in all circumstances. No one is ever injured by being cool or even cold, in air or in water, in clothing or in nature's garb, provided he does not suffer actual discomfort from the cold.

Air is much slower conductor of heat than any of the materials in clothing. Clothing which keeps a layer of air confined about the body is very warm. Two thin garments are warmer than one thick one, for that reason. Any loosely woven porous material is warmer than a closely woven material. It is only because of the air entangled in its meshes that woolen or flannel material is warmer than cotton or linen, as a rule. Cotton or linen of the same thickness and weight as woolen and loosely woven, so that it holds the air entangled in its meshes, is precisely as warm as woolen, but neither cotton nor linen nor silk nor mixtures of these materials will retain a soft, loosely woven character very long, as woolen material does. Of all these materials probably linen is most comfortable for summer underwear because it absorbs moisture more readily than the other materials and so facilitates the evaporation of the sweat — and that is mainly what keeps us comfortable.

Contrary to a popular notion, one should drink very freely of cold water in hot weather if one wants to keep cool. Food or diet which is "cooling" in hot weather contains the greatest amount of water.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Rickets

I read an article in the local paper recently to the effect that the presence of calcium salts in the blood causes rickets. Is it the presence or the lack of calcium salts in the blood that is really the cause? (C. W.)

Answer—Calcium salts are present in the blood in health. It is some fault in the metabolism or utilization of calcium (lime) which is the characteristic feature in rickets. Seldom is this attributable to inadequate calcium ration; some students of rickets have suggested that it may be an excessive elimination of the lime salts. But the latest view is that lack of an essential factor called a vitamin is responsible for the fault of metabolism, and this essential factor is supplied in various ways, either by feeding small amounts of cod liver oil or yolk of egg (which are rich in the essential vitamin); or by treating the child or animal with ultraviolet ray (from direct sunlight, the arc lamp or the mercury-vapor quartz lamp); or by activating other foods (which contain little or none of the essential vitamin) by ultraviolet irradiation and feeding these activated foods.

Twofold Treatment

Your department is worth more than any prize contest department for the readers of the paper. I like so much your twofold treatment—sound scientific information and advice on health problems and humor for headaches and nerves. Please repeat your anti-acid diet list. Thank you in advance. (K. R.)

Answer—It can't be done, for I have not yet given or suggested such a diet list, and according to Webster thanks in advance is non-negotiable anyway.

Removing a Callus

Kindly tell me how to remove a callus, also how a renewal of the callus may be prevented. (Bob.)

Answer—The now w. k. corn remedy is equally efficacious for softening and removing callus:

Salicylic acid .... 30 grains.
Flexible collodion .... ½ ounce.

This must be kept in a tightly stoppered vial and the liquid must be kept off the neck of the vial and off the stopper. Paint the corn or callus once daily for a week or more. To prevent return of corn or callus, stop wearing tight, ill-fitting or freak shaped shoes.

Poems That Live

Mutability.

The flower that smiles today
Tomorrow dies;
All that we wish to stay
Tempts, and then flies.
What is this world's delight?
Lightning that mocks the night,
Brief even as bright.

Virtue, how frail it is!
Friendship, how rare!
Love, how it sells poor bliss
For proud despair!
But we, tho soon they fall,
Survive their joy and all
Which ours we call.

Whilst skies are blue and bright,
Whilst flowers are gay,
Whilst eyes that change ere night
Make glad the day,
Whilst yet the calm hours creep,
Dream thou—and from thy sleep
Then wake to weep.

Who's Who

Abd-el-Krim

Morocco is a centre of international interest today. After ten years of futile endeavor and after the loss of many lives, Spain has virtually admitted her inability to subdue the rebel tribes of the Riff region. France, to protect her holdings and interests, has been forced to take the offensive to forestall the advance of the native army under the command of Abd-el-Krim. Abd-el-Krim's forces have been reputed to be well-equipped with aeroplanes and with artillery. The use of tanks has even been rumored. Authoritative accounts show that Abd-el-Krim has no aviators and no artillery to speak of. But the Riff infantry is redoubtable, well-armed and well-trained. Climate conditions are against white warfare.

ABDEL KRIM

Country Wild and Rough.

The Riff country, with its chain of mountains and foothills, has virtually no civilized handiwork so that transversal roads are rare, rendering mass movement of troops difficult. According to Spanish estimates, the natives number approximately 100,000, scattered far and wide across the region and living in primitive fashion. The men are generally tall, strong, hardy, well acquainted with the mountain paths and rocky retreats. They are well armed with rifles and machine guns and possess an adequate supply of ammunition. They are fanatical, mocking death so long as it is of heroic nature. They are, moreover, well versed in the tactics of modern infantry warfare, thanks to instruction given by deserters from European armies.

Fights With Poor Equipment

Abd-el-Krim's aviation force consists of a few planes captured from the Spanish. The natives know little of mechanics or flying methods. Spare parts are lacking. The aeroplanes are little more than a moral factor to inspire the Riffs, and they remain idle in grass-covered huts. The same can be said for the artillery. Abd-el-Krim cannot place more than three batteries in action. He lacks ammunition, trained gunners and sighting instruments. Here again his cannon figure as a moral element to spur his troops to greater effort. The use of tanks is practically impossible, even if they were available, which they are not.

Abd-el-Krim's account with one of the largest brokers on the Paris Stock Exchange was both large and active up to the time of his offensive against the French lines. Since the beginning of open warfare the account has been stagnant, with a small balance in favor of the Moor.
