BRYAN CONVINCED ABSOLUTELY HE AND COURT ARE RIGHT

DAYTON, Tenn., July 17.—(A. P.) William Jennings Bryan has no doubt of the constitutionality of the Tennessee evolution law. He affirmed today after Judge Raulston had excluded expert testimony from the jury in the John T. Scopes case.

The fundamentalist leader, associated with counsel for the prosecution of the Dayton school teacher insisted that he believed no court will deny the people of Tennessee the right to protect their religion from what they regard as an assault upon it by a minority that is trying to force its views upon the children.

"The court has held the law constitutional in this case and the decision is back by authority that in my judgment is indisputable and unanswerable," Mr. Bryan said.

"The defense brought out every conceivable objection, several of them based on the constitution of Tennessee and one on the constitution of the United States. The court overruled them all and in doing so did what I believe any court and every court will do."

The court cited the recent decision in the Oregon case that covers both the propositions involved in this case. First, that the state has the right to regulate, control and direct the public schools. The opinion specifically declared that the state has the right to direct what shall be taught and to forbid the teaching of anything manifestly inimical to the public welfare. The court in that case also declared that the parent is primarily the guardian of the child, that the child is not the mere creature of the state but that the parent has the duty as well as the privilege of protecting the child and guarding its welfare, meaning its religious welfare, because the Oregon case was a case in which a parochial school was the plaintiff and the court affirmed the right of the parent to send its children to a private school instead of a public school.

"That is just this case: The parents who are the taxpayers and the voters, pass a law to prevent teaching of a certain doctrine called evolution in the public schools. They define the doctrine that they mean. Namely, that man is a descendant of a lower form of life and in the statute they give the reason for this doctrine, that it disputes the Bible record of man's creation."

HINDENBURG SIGNS GOLD DEBT BILL

BERLIN, July 17.—(A. P.) President Von Hindenburg has signed the re-valuation bill passed by the Reichstag Tuesday providing for the exchange of German wartime and pre-war loans for a new issue equal to five per cent of the original loan. Obligations totaling 70,000,000,000 marks thus are converted into a gold debt of 3,500,000,000 marks.

Portland, Ore., July 17.—(A. P.) Announcement was made here today that Edgar W. Smith of Portland, president of the Astoria Flouring Mills company of Astoria, had closed a deal for the purchase of 7500 acres of Palouse wheat land in the St. John country, west of Colfax, Wash. H. H. Boomer, a Spokane contractor, is the owner of the land, for which approximately $300,000 was paid. Six thousand acres of the land, parceled off to tenants, is under cultivation.

SALEM, Ore., July 17.—The condition of Miss Catherine Hiltzen of Portland and Miss Ewa Hopkins of Salem, who were injured when an automobile in which they were riding ran into a train at Derry station, Polk county, early yesterday, was still reported serious today. Miss Hopkins received a broken leg and severe body lacerations and Miss Hiltzen is believed to have a fractured skull. C. J. Ball of Ballston received a broken arm and broken nose, and A. McKabin of Salem, driver of the car was bruised.

Oregon News in Brief

PORTLAND, Ore., July 17.—(A. P.) Businessmen and farmers of the Pacific northwest got together here today in the northwest regional agricultural conference to consider matters of mutual interest.

Marketing, agricultural legislation, farm cost accounting and questions concerning crop and livestock improvement, are among matters on the program.

John N. O'Leary, president of the chamber of commerce of the United States sent a telegram to William Harper Deak, general manager of the agricultural bureau of the national chamber endorsing the conference's work.

TENNIS CHAMPION MADE GOOD FOR HIS SPORT CRITICS

By NORMAN E. BROWN Some eight or nine years ago, when Big Bill Tilden was rambling along on high in the tennis world, he took under his wing, figuratively speaking, a young lad named Vincent Richards. The youth was then some 13 or 14 years old and showed the makings of a great tennis player.

Tilden, master of the game himself, set out to teach Richards the fine points of it. It wouldn't be fair to Tilden to say that he taught better than he knew. Tilden must be given credit for seeing in Richards a great player—the champion that he turned out to be.

Richards won the national "boy" championships in 1917 and 1918. He won, with H. I. Taylor, the junior doubles in 1918.

He won the national junior singles title in 1919-20-21. He won the national indoor junior championship in 1918-19-20. He won the doubles title in that class the last two years mentioned, with Frank T. Anderson and then P. S. McHugh as partners.

He won the national senior indoor title in 1919 and was runner-up to Tilden the next year. He and Tilden won the doubles title both years. Richards and S. H. Voshell won the doubles title in 1921.

Richards regained the singles title, indoor, in 1923 and held it in 1924. Richards, with Francis Hunter, runner-up in the singles, won the doubles title both years.

Richards and Tilden won the national doubles championship in 1918. Richards' first major championship. They returned to power in 1922 and kept the title in 1923.

Richards' showing in 1921 not only caused the national ranking committee to place him in the first ten, but to place him third in the list of the famous. He was retained at No. 3 in 1922, placed No. 4 in 1923, and last year, partly through his brilliant victory over Little Bill Johnston, was shoved up to No. 2.

Going abroad last season, Richards won the Olympic championship by defeating Henri Cochet of France in the final round.

Now, the point is that, while Richards was thus rising to fame in the tennis world while still in his teens, Tilden was at the hey-day of his career, playing along at a pace that would out shore the life of the average player. Tilden, popular and winning, engaged in seasonal, invitational and charity matches in such rapid order that he literally rode from one match to another with his racket.

That he has held his game these years has been a source of wonderment. But many experts now believe that Tilden is about to start on the long road that all veterans must tread. He may and probably will carry through this year, but the pace is telling—and movie contracts will for more of his time.

And the man who looms in the offing as the one to succeed him as king of the courts is the man he taught the game—Vincent Richards. Which is fitting. To Tilden will go a measure of the glory when Richards takes the throne. But it will be a rather regretful gallery that will fill "The King is Dead, Long Live the King" when Tilden steps out in favor of Richards. For what a king Big Bill has been!
