The Gold Hill News editor while evidently in a much peeved mood wrote the following in the latest issue of that publication: "The size of a man is gauged by his actions. One of the small acts that visibly brand some of the Evans Valley residents is their preventing the public picking of evergreen blackberries on their premises. Even though the berries are so plentiful they cannot pick them themselves, they do not want others to pick them and even go so far as to post trespass notices while the berries are wasting on the bushes. Another farmer shows his 'bigness' by posting a notice on another road, 'Half Mile to Good Berry Picking.'"

"Football practice starts this afternoon," says the Ashland Tidings. "Coach Walt Hughes, football coach at the Ashland high school believes in getting the jump on the season, and as a result will have his men out, hard at work all this week, in advance of many of the grid squads in southern Oregon. Hughes has been spending a part of his vacation at the University of California, where he picked up a lot of new points, dropped by Andy Smith, Bruin mentor. The Ashland coach has no idea of the material he will work with this season. Most of his last year's squad have graduated, left school, or are not eligible for football this season, and Hughes is sure of but three men who played on the Ashland outfit last year."
