WORLD SERIES STARS MAY QUIT AFTER LAST GAME

PITTSBURG, Oct. 16.—(By The Associated Press)—Baseball has unexpected and at times strange ways of shifting its forces; its athletes of changing their colors.

There have been a number of queer twists of late that have brought stars of the rival Pittsburg and Washington clubs together in a battle that now goes to the limit of seven games to decide the 1925 world's championship. There may be new turns of the wheel to come, for baseball circles have under discussion the prospect that two and perhaps three of the outstanding figures of the current series may don their present uniforms for the last time in the final game.

The figures in this discussion—for that seems the only definite basis for conclusions, now—are Roger Peckinpaugh, assistant manager and shortstop of the Senators and Max Carey, captain and center fielder of the Pirates.

Goose Goslin of the Senators, world's series home run king is the third subject.

Most substantial of the gossip linked with Peckinpaugh is that the veteran infielder is to succeed Lee Fohl as manager of the Red Sox, going to Boston in a trade which would send a capable pitcher to Washington, possibly Howard Ehmke.

Carey, it is said, has managerial ambitions too, and may be involved in a transaction which would also help the Pirate pitching staff. To support this, it is pointed out that Barney Dreyfuss, Pittsburg owner, has just obtained at a high price one of the most highly touted outfielders in the minors, Paul Waner of San Francisco, along with the crack shortstop of the same club, Hal Rhyne.

There has been no official support given to any of this speculation thus far. Dreyfuss refused to intimate any changes he may have in mind so far as his pennant winning regulars are concerned.

Griffith too, lends no backing to reports of a shift for Peckinpaugh.

Peckinpaugh himself, however, lends some color to the speculation. The veteran knows that his best playing days are numbered although he was voted the most valuable performer to his club of any American Leaguer this year. He intimated last night that he would like to take the reins of the Red Sox in an effort to bring them back to the baseball heighths they have often held in the past.

O. A. C. TEAM FIT FOR WHITMAN CONTEST

CORVALLIS, Ore., Oct. 15.—Final scrimmage of the week prior to the Whitman game in Portland Saturday was held by the Oregon Agricultural college football team last night when the rook team furnished the opposition.

The scrimmage was described as "very satisfactory" by Coach Schissler. No training injuries have occurred this week and as the wave of sickness that troubled the team last week has subsided, the men will be in top form for the coming contest. Jim Dixon, tackle, is out in a suit now, but he will be kept out of the game Saturday. Robbins, first string end, has not fully recovered from the injury received a week ago, so Logan will probably start at right end.

YESTERDAY'S RESULTS

At Seattle-Portland, no game, fog.
At San Francisco 1; Oakland 3.
At Sacramento 2; Salt Lake 1.
At Los Angeles 2; Vernon 5.

Medford Rotary Club News

The speaker this week at the Medford Rotary luncheon held at the Hotel Medford, was George Neuner, United States district attorney. Mr. Neuner is in Medford as prosecutor in the U. S. federal court.

The very able address to Mr. Neuner, who is a native Oregonian, hence knows Oregon and its ways, gave a highly appreciated talk on community topics of interest that was greatly appreciated, especially as they pertained also to Medford problems. This address will long be remembered by the members and visitors.

The Rev. Mr. Jones gave a short talk on the work being accomplished in connection with Near East relief work. Mr. Jones and associates are in the valley for a few days in connection with th siwork.

The visitors were Judge G. E. Wolverton, U. S. District Attorney George Neuner, Rev. Jones and associates from Portland.

The visiting Rotarians were L. D. Jones, now of Salem, but formerly of Medford; E. O. Ducker, Portland; Jack E. Kerr, Grans Pass; Earl Whitlock, Delmer V. Kuykendall and Clarence H. Underwood of the Klamath Falls club.

Natives and Fish in Greenland

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13.—How the Eskimos live in icy Greenland, one of the most forbidding of all inhabited areas, is related in the following bulletin from the National Geographic society, based on a radio dispatch from the MacMillan arctic expedition:

"Aside from its mines of coal and cryolite, Greenland is as free of industry and manufacture as it is of agriculture, husbandry or forestry. The rock lace-work border between Ice Cap and sea offers no opportunity for farming or herding and a two-inch tree produces little lumber. But there are thousands of suitable harbors to which a kayak or a small wooden boat can retreat from the storm.

Fishing Only Industry.

"The Eskimo has been repulsed by a barren land which, however, welcomes him cordially when fish are piled on his deck or walrus or seal drag at his towline. It is natural therefore that the only industrial plant we saw in Greenland should be related to fishing.

"Across a narrow bight from the main town of Holstenborg is a small but modern factory for canning halibut. There girls, in bright head collars, work for 40 cents a day, solder cans, weigh the firm white flesh or scrub sections of the big fish in chilly tubs of sea water.

"In the north, as elsewhere, civilization has been working its way with primitive peoples. What has meant wealth to Gloucester has meant increasing want to the kayaker, and the Danes have sought to provide employment for these Greenlanders who, while developing tastes for imported articles, are farming their once productive half acres less profitably than before. The halibut cannery at Holstenborg is an attempt to enable a settlement to live through cooperation at a time when individual skill and initiative are on the wane. Sons of kayakers who would brave any storm, get seasick on the big halibut schooner and it is hard to find efficient men at any price commensurate with possible return.

Trapping White Whales.

"Greenland halibut is perfection in fish food and a sale is gradually being developed for canned halibut produced in a factory which answers a demand, not for food or profit, but for employment by those who would otherwise lack it. Sukkertoppen has become prosperous by running nets between islands and trapping white whales. The whal factory around which th entire economic life of the town centers can be provided with eight hundred carcasses in a season.

"Holstenborg depends on a big flat fish to keep bright boots on its women and fat cheeks on its babies.

"The halibut is the king of those fish whose wandering eyes and shifting body planes make them seem deformed when they are actually highly developed for the life they lead. Although the life history of the halibut is still unknown, a study of these flat fish leads one to think that during growth one eye migrates across the head and that the body axis shifts.

Changes Skin to Match Bottom.

"Not only because of his shifty eye and turnable spine is the halibut interesting, but he is also able to change the color of his skin to match that of the bottom near which he lies. In some mysterious way this ability to play chameleon is connected with eyesight and a severing of the optic nerve robs the halibut of its protean ability to camouflage himself against the home he has chosen and the furniture amid which he moves. Only by keeping his eyes open can the halibut work out a color scheme of his own. So commercial fishermen prevent thos flesh from becoming discolored by using the fish's own body as a blinder and laying hi meyes down.

"When a schooner arrives in port with many of its cargo still alive, the kins are full of fish, all stacked with the white side up. As the huge fish are lifted to the wharf, the first operation is to cut off the head, which forms a considerable portion of the body, and tons of these are thrown into the harbor or given to the poor of the town. Just before night one sees pairs of trousered girls bringing home baskets of fish heads which are split and hung from poles to keep them from the dogs and allow them to dry. These drying heads give flavor to the town and make its scent as vivid as are the local colors in which bright beads have so large a part.

Rescue Ship Now a Pier.

"Out in the harbor is the towering hulk of the Old Peru, a gallant ship which was once sent to the relief of Nansen but is now used as a floating pier.

"Like the primitive peoples of the north, this venerable vessel has a flat nose and high cheek bones, so that it seems as though it could float broadside as easily as go ahead. An old sailor down in Maine described such a vessel by saying that if a bucket fell overboard under her bowsprit, she would bump it ahead of her for a week before she could get past it. This old vessel marks one stage in the Royal Danish Trading company. The shiny tin cans of the Holsteinborg cannery, filled to the top with the firm flesh of the northern halibut, mark another stage in modern man's effort to adapt himself to changing surroundings, as the king of flatfish does in shifting eye and body axis and changing the color of his skin."
