Eight city lots daily are the average sold by the six members of the realty board, who were given an option a week ago of 60 days to dispose of the lots for the city. Originally there were 64 lots and at present approximately one-third of that number is left, six of which are being sold today. The 64 lots are all on pavement and when these have been sold another block not on pavement will be offered for sale.

Members of the Chautauqua association, although there will probably be no more Chautauquas held this year, are already laying plans for the presenting of a program during next summer. It was learned today, says the Ashland Tidings, "This is the first year since the organization of the Chautauqua association, that Ashland has been without a program, and it was at first suggested that a two day program could be held this year. However, such a program, with imported talent, would require the expenditure of too much money, and has definitely been abandoned. There is a possibility of staging a Chautauqua program with talent secured from the various cities throughout the valley, it is said."
