Large buying power is very necessary to enable any store to sell groceries cheap, but the thing that usually makes groceries high is the difference between the price the grocer pays and the price the grocer asks you to pay—this difference is made necessary by the grocer's operating cost—Santford's system of stores is different—Santford's stores only require part of the space in each room—Santford's cost for rent is very small, while the ordinary merchant has high rent to pay—If he decides to operate two or three stores to get his share of the patronage he has two or three rents to pay—Remember rents help make the difference between the price the grocer pays and the price you pay.

The landing field at Eugene apparently is in a better condition than the Medford field, as the big ten-passenger ship of the West Coast Transit company was reported to have been stuck on that field last Wednesday, making it over an hour and a half behind schedule when it made an emergency stop here for gasoline. The ship was to have stopped here regularly but the muddy condition of the local field made it impossible. However, the field is now being rapidly improved and the West Coast company will make stops as soon as sufficient improvements have been made.
