

BASEBALL SEASON TO START MAY 20, LIONS' CLUB TOLD

The baseball season will open in Medford May 20, when the local nine will meet another team in the Southern Oregon league for the first time this year.

Schedules will be worked out at the Yreka meeting, and an early announcement of the first game and succeeding games on the Medford calendar will be made through the local papers.

A pitcher, who has expressed himself as being in favor of moving to Medford to take up permanent residence will probably be taken on as one of the principals in this season's games, according to Court Hall, although home talent is to be used as nearly as possible.

Two games are scheduled for May 5 and 6 with the House of David, he said.

An educational program on the traffic laws, is the latest project to be sponsored by the local Lions club, who will take a number of pictures of traffic violations and carry on contests in the Medford schools in order to awaken interest in the new laws.

Fire Chief Roy Elliott announced the coming of Governor I. L. Patterson, the fire marshalls of the states of Oregon and California and the president of the Pacific Coast Fire Chiefs' association, in Medford next Wednesday.

PROHIBITION IS SIDESTEPED BY NATIONAL CLUB

NEW YORK, April 18.—(AP)—The National Republican club has sidestepped the prohibition question. The club in executive session last night tabled a majority report of its committee on national affairs, advocating repeal of the 18th amendment.

The vote on the two reports came after almost three hours' debate and the outcome apparently met with the approval of both factions. The vote was 124 to 88.

Richard W. Lawrence, who was inducted into the office of president immediately after the vote on the motion to table, was among those who spoke against the majority report.

He quoted President Coolidge, Secretary Hoover, Senator Curtis of Kansas and former Governor Lowden of Illinois on law enforcement, and asked:

"How can this club properly take a position opposed to that of the men mentioned as the leading possibilities for the republican nomination for president?"

The name of Governor Smith was frequently brought into the discussion and opponents of the majority asserted it proposed to go further than Governor Smith in his opposition to prohibition.

After the meeting Representative Benjamin S. Fairchild, chairman of the committee and leader of the majority faction, expressed satisfaction with the vote.

"To receive 88 votes on a side-stepping resolution based on political expediency, showed progress," he said. "It means that the sentiment for the repeal of the amendment will go ahead, not only in the club but in the nation."

Andrew Humphrey, leader of the opposing faction, said the 212 members present were largely from New York City.

The club has 2000 members, most of them out of town, he said. "There are hardly any wets in the club after you cross the Hudson and Harlem rivers."

PEORIA CITIZEN MENTIONED FOR SEAT OF SMITH

CHICAGO, April 18.—(AP)—The Chicago Herald and Examiner said today that Governor Small probably would appoint John Dalley of Peoria to the seat in the United States senate, which twice was refused a former appointee, Frank L. Smith.

Smith sought renomination in the primary election last week, but was defeated by Otis F. Glenn, candidate of the Lowden-Deneen faction of the republican party, Dalley, running for nomination as attorney general on the Thompson-Small slate was defeated by Oscar E. Carlstrom, incumbent.

The paper said that favorable consideration had been given to overtures in behalf of the veteran state senator and that the governor "will announce his decision at a conference today or tomorrow."

Senator Dalley is the one man upon whom both factions of the republican party can agree, the paper said. "He is popular locally and is on friendly terms with United States Senator Deussen."

IRISH ACE HOMESICK (Continued from Page One.) had flown to Canada from New York in a sister ship of the trans-Atlantic plane.

CLARKE CITY, April 18.—(AP)—The Canadian Press.) Among the dangers encountered by the fliers of the trans-Atlantic plane Bremen on its journey from Ireland to Greenly island, listed in one of the first interviews with Major James Fitzmaurice, was a collision with a sheep.

Major Fitzmaurice on his way from Greenly island to Murray Bay told F. L. Collier, representative of the Clark Steamship company here that just as the plane was about to take the air at Baldonnel near Dublin, a sheep trotted across the runway.

The Bremen bounced off the ground just in time to avoid grinding the animal up in the propeller but the tail of the airplane struck the sheep and cut it badly.

Although the collision of an airplane and a bleating sheep may sound humorous, the danger was very serious actually. The take-off was considered one of the most critical moments of the flight, the plane being so heavily loaded with gasoline and a head-on collision might easily have upset the ship.

MURRAY BAY, Que., April 18.—(By The Canadian Press.)—Per-foot flying weather prevailing here today in contrast to the past few days, led the many who await the coming of James Fitzmaurice of the trans-Atlantic plane Bremen to expect his arrival early today from Clarke City.

THE LAST FEW HUNDRED MILES OF THE LONG JOURNEY FROM GREENLY ISLAND.

NEW YORK, April 18.—(AP)—Fragmentary details from the frozen north, pieced together today revealed a dramatic story of the trans-Atlantic plane Bremen, successfully groping blind through fog and blizzard for the continent of its destination.

An auspicious start developed at the end into a battle with the elements, as the fliers were some 400 miles off their course, due partly to the failure of the plane's lighting system.

For hours the flight was blind. Once the plane was fifty feet from the water, a strange river was seen, then a mountain. At last was sighted what appeared to be a sealing steamer. It proved to be the lighthouse on Greenly island.

Shortly after midnight, eastern standard time last Thursday, the Bremen stood fully fueled for her flight on the runway at Baldonnel airdrome. Captain Hermann Koehl and Major James Fitzmaurice sat at the controls. In a compartment behind sat Baron von Huenefeld ready to man the fuel pump.

Captain Koehl and Major Fitzmaurice went to communion before getting in the plane for their great adventure. They took a crucifix of Connemara marble with them. The fliers called German friends that they were putting their trust in the hands of God.

After a daring take-off through a breach in a stone wall, the plane was going strong, two hours later well over the Atlantic, having passed over Costello, Galway, at 2:05 a. m. Foggy weather prevailed along the coast because of the heat. Soon, however, the plane ran into clear weather over the Atlantic.

light hours, the plane traveled westward rapidly. That night, however, a blizzard swept the ocean. The plane lost altitude in the storm conditions and it was flying very low.

The lighting system failed during the night. The fliers were unable to read their instruments and Captain Koehl's long experience in night flying in Germany stood them in good stead. Daybreak gave them opportunity to correct their direction.

The weather, however, became worse and worse and it was only with great difficulty that the plane could be kept up.

Off the coast of Newfoundland they struck a heavy fog and began to wander. They tried to fly above it, but at 2000 feet the fog still enveloped them. They descended to within 50 feet of the waves, but had to climb upward again because of the high seas running and which threatened to engulf them.

Then they saw land. It was a wooded country and they flew over it, trying to locate their position.

Next they flew over a large river which they could not identify. A large mountain loomed in their path. Again the Bremen headed upward and over it.

The fuel was rapidly running low and the country over which they were flying offered no opportunity for a forced landing which would probably have proved fatal. Baron von Huenefeld was cold and exhausted. All through the flight he kept his pistol by his side ready to shoot his companions if worse came to worst.

THERE WAS A SMALL POND ON THE ISLAND AND ALTHOUGH THE BREMEN WAS WITHOUT SKIDS FOR A LANDING ON ICE THEY DESCENDED.

The plane broke through the ice. The metal structure was bent, the axle of the landing gear broken.

"Thank God," said the fliers, as they climbed from the plane, having accomplished the first leg of the westward non-stop flight across the Atlantic. It was noon Friday, April 12.

The Baron made his way at once to the lighthouse, but refused to eat until his companions arrived. Then, as the Baron shivered in the cold, they sat down to their first meal in America—biscuits and fresh milk.

Finally, as despair grew, they saw what they took to be a sealing steamer frozen in the ice. It was the lighthouse on Greenly island. They did not know where they were for their log bearings and compass were inaccurate.
