

Local and Personal

The city seemed rather quiet today because of this being election day, a legal holiday, and with the banks, city hall and courthouse offices and the courts closed all day. Despite the fact had been announced previously that the banks would be closed, many people forgot all about it until today, when it was too late to do any banking business.

After having appeared as a witness in the Chaney trial, which resulted last night in the acquittal of District Attorney N. C. Chaney, Dr. E. G. Heinrich, well known Berkeley, Calif., criminologist, left last evening for his home. He was in Medford since last Sunday, May 13, which is the same day upon which he arrived here last year to testify in the DeAutremont case. Another coincidence of his visit is the fact that a juror in the Chaney trial became ill as did a juror in the DeAutremont trial.

Impostors who represent themselves as officials of the Salvation Army have been a source of embarrassment to that organization during the past few months, according to Brigadier Albert E. Dayton, in charge of the work in Oregon and southern Idaho. The impostors have obtained Salvation Army uniforms somehow, and have solicited funds in the name of the organization. In order to safeguard against such practices in the future, Brigadier Dayton has issued a signed card to each authorized worker, and urges that persons insist on seeing the cards before tendering donations.—The Oregonian.
