FAME IS THE REWARD OF THOSE WHO RAKE CHESTNUTS OUT OF THE FIRE

WHEN Bismarck had returned home after a clever diplomatic stroke that tended to make Germany great, he refused to show himself to the crowds that gathered to cheer him. "What would they have done," he asked his servant, "if I had failed?"

He knew that people cheer only those who grind their axe. In time of peace you hear no cheers for soldiers. People do not feel indignant because soldiers are improperly housed and inadequately fed. They give no thought to soldiers.

What, then, is the meaning of the cheers when soldiers leave for the front? The cheer is easily translated. It means: "You are going out to fight for me while I remain safely at home. Hurrah for you!"

The little busy bee is not more busy than the ant. Why, then, does it receive so much more praise? The answer is obvious. It stores up honey that men can steal.

Can you remember hearing any praise for the soldier on the other side who did a heroic thing? Never. The one on our side who laughs at danger is a hero; the one on the other side who laughs at danger is a brute.

Men do not receive praise in proportion to their work, but in proportion to the service rendered to those who cheer. The more fine qualities the opposition possesses, the more he is hated and condemned.

We praise the bridge that carries us over. We cheer the man who does our chores. We erect a statue of the man who raked our chestnuts out of the fire.

Fame is the good opinion of those whose back you scratch. Do not despair if you are unhonored and unsung. Obscurity is no disgrace. It means only that you have attended to your own business and that nobody has used you as a cat's paw.

The sound of clapping hands is music to the vain, but those who get no applause need not despise themselves. All the world cheers the man who stands true.

Let the famous have their fame. They pay for it. If in obscurity you hear no cheers, neither are you hissed.—Robert Quillen.

Personal Health Service

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D. Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease diagnosis or treatment, will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed. Letters should be brief and written in ink. Owing to the large number of letters received, only a few can be answered here. No reply can be made to queries not conforming to instructions. Address Dr. William Brady, in care of this newspaper.

PERILS OF FISH DAY Mr. Stefansson tells in his book "The Friendly Arctic" (which is to my mind the greatest of books about polar and arctic exploration) frozen raw fish, when he finally got a way from his kind but missed a bit of it and off by sledge over the ice to the hospital, 30 days' travel away, with typhoid fever. Every doctor knows something about the ravenous appetite of the typhoid patient for real food. But the joy Mr. Stefansson got out of the frozen fish puzzled me. Not long ago I asked him, just before dinner, how he would like some raw fish frozen to a turn. He said he would enjoy the delicacy if he could get the grade they had up north. He asked me if I cared for blue points on the half shell, and when I nodded an affirmative he intimated that I ain't tasted nothing yet.

Someone sent me a clipping from which I deduce that a bitter battle has been going on in certain parts of Minnesota, over the question whether the Danes, Swedes or Finns prefer their Lake Superior—or the bow many thousands of Minnesota lakes—fish raw or cooked. The call to the colors was sounded, it seems, when some doctor without apparent motive charged that Minnesotans eat raw fish or practically raw.

I have not seen with my own eyes, but I have recognized by other senses, certain shell fish that I'd be sorry to eat raw, cooked, poached, fried or broiled. But I can readily believe that the kind of fish they catch in Minnesota are excellent to eat in any style the Minnesotans eat 'em—and I'd be delighted to take dinner with a Minnesotan in his own shack near the water, if I were not so terribly afraid of fish tapeworm infestation.

In this country we have heretofore managed to get along very well with practically two kinds of tapeworm—the commonest that infests man being the beef tapeworm (Tenia saginata), and a comparatively small proportion of cases of human infestation by the pork tapeworm (Tenia solium). Lately, however, medical biologists have found that in certain parts of the country, notably Minnesota and upper Michigan, the fresh water fishes harbor still a third kind of tapeworm that will infect man if he eats the fish raw or underdone, and this one bears a little more than the commonest tapeworm, in that the condition it produces in human hosts, Diphyllobothrium latum, or broad tapeworm. This tapeworm was formerly found only in certain immigrants from Finland, Sweden and other Baltic countries, and the experts believe these immigrants brought the parasites to America, and their excrement carried the tapeworm eggs or larvae to the fishes.

Let us not dwell on the impairment of health caused by infestation with this fish tapeworm, further than to say it is more marked than infestation with either of the other kinds of tapeworm. I must warn readers here that of course I can give no counsel or encouragement to persons who undertake to diagnose or treat their own tapeworm, actual or imagined. This is a question to be submitted to the judgment of your physician.

Varities of fish that have been found infested are the great northern pike, wall-eyed pike, sand lake perch, salmon. Probably most varieties of fish are infested in regions where the fish tapeworm is prevalent.

The best assurance against infestation by the fish tapeworm is thorough cooking of the fish, just as thorough cooking of beef or pork protects against infestation with beef or pork tapeworm.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS Rupture. Q.—Is dangerous to have an old rupture out? When a person has it out can they get it back?—W. L. J.

Answer.—For safety as well as comfort, efficiency and economy, a person should have a rupture operated upon, unless there is some special reason why this is not advisable. In the radical cure of ruptures nothing is removed, since time, hernia or rupture operations fail or cure. Sometimes persons who have had successful surgical treatment do later develop a new rupture. If I had a rupture I'd have the operation and no fooling. Of course the numerous plasters, appliances and medicaments purporting to cure ruptures are humbugs.

Flow Legs. I am 21 years old. I never had low legs until about three years ago. I seem to keep getting worse. Is there any cure? I am 61 inches tall and weigh 95 pounds. A certain firm claims to have cured hundreds of cases with a patent appliance that gradually straightens the limbs. —Miss C. A. M.

Answer.—No appliance or other patented device will straighten low legs in a person over six years of age. Perhaps your legs seem bowed to you merely because they are so skinny. You should endeavor to put on flesh—you ought to weigh 30 pounds more. Include a stamped envelope bearing your address, and ask for instructions for gaining weight, but do not send clippings.

My Goodness. I wonder if you can give me some corrective diets for anemia, constipation, etc., as I have to give a lesson on this subject at a club. —Mrs. P. M. C.

Answer.—Just assure the members of the club that nothing they can eat will cause either malady. (Copyright John F. Dille Co.)

Justice in New York has written a different epitaph for the famous Whittemore man. Nate Weinmann, last of that tribe which ruled in various slums, will go to jail for about forty years. Richard Reese Whittemore, the leader, was hanged in Baltimore not long ago. Milton ("Shorthills") Goldberg is in jail to stay twenty years. "Baltimore Willie" Enkelbach and Leon and Jacob Kramer are with Goldberg in Danmora, prison serving forty-year sentences.

Rippling Rhymes

(By Walt Mason) POPULAR VERGIC I read the works of Jasper Jinks, who writes five novels every year, and they are vastly worse, methinks, than any others, far or near. I read them hoping I can find the reason why their sales are great, why all the races of mankind are rooting for that Jasper skate. I read them with a weary smile, to me they seem a thing absurd; they're lacking all the grace and style that should adorn the printed word. The characters like wooden toys, so through their little round of tricks; the girls are silly and the boys are always mediocre licks. Why do these stories sell in tons, these books that are not worth a boot and Jinks is rich while gifted ones can't raise the price of a cheroot. Sometimes I think I'll hire a hulk and through this matter out at length, and turn Jinks' picture to the wall, and show his work's devoid of strength. And then again it seems to me the fault is mine, I am to blame; I am so dense I cannot see the reasons why Jinks conquered fame. There is some merit in his work that eye escapes these eyes of mine; amid his pages there must lurk some symptom of the fire divine. If millions buy his gaudy tales, and for the next one wildly yearn, it shows that somewhere worth prevails that I am too stupid to discern. And so I buy his latest yarn, I have the time beside me now, as I sit writing in the barn, while round me sports my festive crew. To buy it easier crowds have gathered around the bookstores for a week; it must have worth, but I'll be hanged if I can find the faintest strand.

Police had supposed that Masterson himself dropped the key into a mail box some time Tuesday and they worked on the theory that he might still be alive instead of drowned in the Willamette river. The new development today concerning the key revived some interest in the theory that Masterson had jumped into the river after he left an east side hotel where he changed his bloody shirt and suit for other clothing. His billfold and some of his papers were found in the river Tuesday.

The county grand jury yesterday investigated the killing of Mrs. Stoy, visiting the hotel room where the tragedy occurred following a drinking party, and interviewing friends of Mrs. Stoy who had spent Monday evening with her and Masterson.

Hotel employees, taxi drivers and Archie Stoy, of Aberdeen, and Centralia, husband of the woman, also were questioned.

ANTIOCH ITEMS

A large number of people from outside our community were seen in the Antioch cemetery on Memorial day decorating the graves of friends and relatives.

It has been quite difficult to find the names of all former service men who are buried in the Antioch cemetery. It is very likely that quite a number of old soldiers are buried there but present investigations revealed only three. The old soldiers who have been identified and flags placed on their graves are: James B. Rogers, Mexican war veteran; Thomas Brown, Civil war veteran and Victor Creighton, Spanish-American war veteran. If anyone in the community knows of any other old soldiers in Antioch cemetery please notify Grant Martin, local member of the American Legion, and flags will be placed on their graves.

Eva Frink of Antioch was the only student of the Sams Valley high school to receive the attendance certificate for perfect attendance during the past year.

KEY MYSTERY IN PORTLAND MURDER CASE IS SOLVED

PORTLAND, Ore., June 1.—(AP) Police Chief George P. Masterson called the key to the hotel room in which Mrs. Marjorie Stoy of Aberdeen, Wash., was shot to death Tuesday morning was found today when Amador Zanevill, proprietor of the Portland Custom Garment company, reported to the police that he found the key and placed it in a mail box Tuesday.

Zanevill found the key at 6 p. m. Tuesday at the corner of Broadway and Burnside, several blocks from the location of the hotel where the killing occurred in Masterson's room. Zanevill placed it in a mail box at 6 p. m. The same day at the corner of Sixth and Ankeny and the mail room gave attention to the matter until he noticed a newspaper report concerning the return of the key.

Police had supposed that Masterson himself dropped the key into a mail box some time Tuesday and they worked on the theory that he might still be alive instead of drowned in the Willamette river. The new development today concerning the key revived some interest in the theory that Masterson had jumped into the river after he left an east side hotel where he changed his bloody shirt and suit for other clothing.
