At the Rialto Today

Tom Mix and Caryl Lincoln in "Hello Chrysele!"

Tom Mix, rated as the world's best known horseman, because his screen dramas are shown in more than 1200 theatres every day in the year, is now appearing in "Hello Chrysele!" at the Rialto Theatre tomorrow. A westerner, born in the west, raised in the west, Mix "lived his own life" in the vast open spaces and caught all the virile clean-minded drama and romance which he took to the screen when he decided to be a motion picture actor.

Few animals have developed such a film fan following as Tom, the horse which appears in all of Mix's pictures. He is perfectly formed animal with an unusually developed mind, which grasps situations and gives him power to do his own thinking.

'Patent Leather Kid' Pleases Audiences

Richard Barthelmess never had a more important role, nor gave a more sincere performance than in "The Patent Leather Kid," now at Hunt's Craterian.

"The Patent Leather Kid" is the story of the regeneration of the soul of a very humble private in the army, a boy who through environment and training was a poor citizen and slacker.

He is drafted into the army against his wishes, is a coward in actual warfare and hates his government and his flag until, in the midst of a battle, his "lucky" is shot. This, combined with the love of a patriotic girl who is dancing in the Y. M. C. A. huts, brings about the sudden transition, and the boy is "reborn."

His better qualities are revived and he emerges from the conflict a hero and a good citizen.

The two vitaphone acts that are on the same bill are knock-outs for entertainment. The "Senator" Ford act is crammed full of humor from the start to finish and naturally to hear and see Waring's Pennsylvania, an orchestra that has a world-wide reputation cannot help but be a sensational pleasure.
