"The auto ride is the best thing that happened to us since we left home," said Mr. Firestone. Mr. Firestone is a personal friend of many years of W. A. Folger of this city, and he expressed regret at his inability to see him, effort to locate the local man proving unavailing.

Pastor Morris Lukens, president of the North Pacific union conference, which comprises the states of Oregon, Washington, Montana and Idaho, spoke last evening on "Who Changed the Day of Sabbath Observance?" He pointed out from the fourth commandment that the seventh day is the Sabbath and showed from the writers of the New Testament that the Sabbath, according to the commandment, lies between Good Friday and Easter Sunday. He asserted that neither Christ nor the apostles changed the day. He read from the prophecy in the seventh chapter of the book of Daniel where the four universal kingdoms of this world are depicted by great beasts of prey and explained that the work of the fourth kingdom was to speak great words against the Most High, and think to change times and the law. He declared that this fourth kingdom was the Roman empire, and then read extracts from the standard works of the Roman church that they make and boast for having changed the day of Sabbath observance from Saturday to Sunday in the early ages of Christianity.
