SUPERIORITY OF RUSCO EXPLAINED

J. H. Hoppes, sales representative in Oregon for the Russell Manufacturing company, makers of well known Rusco-brake lining, arrived in Medford Saturday to assist the dealers in this city and the Rogue River valley to prepare their stocks of Rusco lining for the summer and fall selling season. "Rusco lining is making a bit throughout the state," Mr. Hoppes said Saturday. "Our sales figures show a constantly increasing number of users and we are unusually optimistic over conditions in our line in Oregon."

According to Mr. Hoppes, many accidents due to improper brakes should never happen. Rusco, he claims, will stop a car from six to 14 feet quicker in an emergency. As he explains, hits and misses are usually separated by feet and inches. In the thousands of cases where with ordinary brake lining an accident is almost avoided—it will actually be avoided if the brakes are lined with "Rusco" brake lining, because of the six to 14 feet away the "Rusco" lined brakes provide.

Mr. Hoppes claims that accidents due to slipping brakes caused by wet weather can be entirely avoided by the use of "Rusco" brake lining. "Rusco" brake lining brakes as well in wet weather as in dry, he says.
