Pointers for Parents

Parents' ideals, their adjustment to their work, and their use of leisure time are powerful influences in molding children's habits and standards, apart from any conscious teachings, says "Children, The Magazine for Parents."

Because their help is needed at home older children in a large family are frequently deprived of a chance to play. Though some home service may be necessary and reasonable, the natural craving for play should not be unduly suppressed, and Saturday outings and picnics, scout activities, skating, boating, swimming, dancing under wholesome conditions, should be encouraged.

An egg is really two foods instead of one. Iron is the distinctive mineral contribution made by the egg. One yolk contains about the same amount of this element as a two-thirds cup of spinach, one-fifth cup of steamed spinach, one and one-half cups of dried carrots, one-eighth pound of lean beef or one and one-half ounces of liver.

Intelligent, sympathetic understanding of the child—not repression and domination—will lead to the fullest development of his personality.

Personality and habit training are not suspended during vacation time. In fact, the summer may be made to yield a larger crop of good habits than the school days.

Keeping Dainty in Hot Weather

What made your blue dress turn a queer yellow green across the shoulders? What caused the hole under the arm in your rose silk? What is that clinging odor in last summer's best dress that makes you shudder to wear it this year? Just one answer to all three questions—"perparation, its odor and acid"—for these two properties have a very damaging effect on clothing that comes in contact with the skin.

If the material is not too thin, small shields can be sewed in, but these should be washed frequently or they become objectionable. For transparent fabrics, and for some cuts of dresses, the use of shields is not feasible, and more often women use certain liquids, powders and creams which can be bought and which are easily applied. These remedies tend to neutralize the perspiration and to prevent injury to frocks, as well as to check the disagreeable odor.

In every well supplied bathroom are soaps, toothpastes and powders, cold creams and mouth washes, and nowadays a reliable deodorant is found there also. Using a deodorant is an economical habit, for it helps preserve the clothing, as well as neutralize the disagreeable odors which emanate from the skin.

Pre-ty stockings, a necessity created by present-day styles, can be made to last much longer if the feet are bathed daily and a deodorant applied, for acid dampness within the shoe causes silk and rayon fibers to break and alkali to result. By a neutral deodorant and, of course, washing the hose each night, the life of stockings can be lengthened several weeks.

Elbow New Shows

Shleensless sports dresses, unless worn with their coats, make the average girl conscious of her elbows, and long-sleeved dresses of transparent material have almost the same effect, so the daily manicure must now stop up the arm and include a special treatment for the elbows. Who knows—perhaps the nagging habit of resting one's elbows on the table will be a natural death as we become more interested in beautiful arms. Many elbows now are covered with brown, worn-looking skin which has come there largely from hard usage on table tops. After a good scrub with a stiff skin-brush, care should be taken to rub in a cleansing cream each night with a skin tonic, will bring results that are more than commensurate with the time and effort spent.

The wise woman who travels, even on a short motor trip, takes along as a boon companion one of the convenient little week-end packages shown in the stores at 10-15-cent counters. A variety of helpful beauty aids are to be found in these carefully planned boxes—cream, skin tonic and cleansing cream, or soap, toothpaste and tissues, or a collection may be for use on the hands alone. Before buying the "table of contents" examine the list of contents to see the one which suits your needs best.

Let this summer be one of cheerful daintiness, no matter how warm or muggy the days may be.
