Undulant Fever—A New Disease in Oregon

There have recently come to the attention of the State Board of Health several cases of undulant fever, a disease hitherto unknown, or at least unrecognized, in this state. The term undulant fever is applied to this disease because it is characterized by waves of fever lasting a week or so alternating with periods of several days when there is no, or little fever. Undulant fever is also known as Malta fever, because the disease was first observed on the island of Malta in the seventeenth century. There, as well as in other parts of the world where Malta fever occurred, human infection was traceable to the use of goat's milk. In this country undulant fever has been largely contracted by the use of milk from cows that had prematurely lost their young, a condition known as "contagious abortion." The few cases discovered in Oregon drank milk from cattle that were known to be aborted. The germ causing Malta fever, Bacillus Maltensis, can be distinguished only with the greatest difficulty from the germ causing contagious abortion, Bacillus Abortus.

Contagious abortion in cattle presents a serious problem not only in the health hazards offered to the consumers of raw milk, but also in the tremendous loss in dollars and cents to the dairy industry of this state. Dr. W. H. Lytle, State Veterinarian, estimates that from five to ten per cent of the herds of the Willamette valley are infected with the germ causing contagious abortion, and that the loss to the dairymen is easily over one and a half million dollars annually.

Undulant fever has often been mistaken for typhoid fever, particularly where the disease has been of a milk type. Danish authorities assert that there are more cases of undulant than typhoid fever in Denmark. The number of cases of undulant fever has increased remarkably in the United States in the past year because of correct diagnosis of the disease.

The chief symptoms of the disease are loss of appetite, loss of weight, marked weakness, headache, chills, fever, profuse sweating, and frequently pain in the joints. The average duration of the illness from the onset to convalescence is three months, but cases lasting a year or longer are not at all rare. The mortality is very low. The germ may be found in the blood stream and in the urine. In suspected cases blood for agglutination test should be submitted to the State Hygienic Laboratory. All cases of undulant fever should be reported to the State Board of Health. The patient should be kept in modified quarantine. Discharges should be disinfected, and all sanitary precautions employed in the control of intestinal diseases should be applied to undulant fever.

The existence of undulant fever in Oregon is another argument for the pasteurization of milk. In rural communities where pasteurizing plants are not available, milk from infected cows should be boiled before drinking.

With reference to the foregoing, will say that when you use GOLD SEAL CREAMERY PRODUCTS, better milk and ice cream, you get this added insurance, you are SAFE, because these products are pasteurized by men whose better recognized in the trade.

Such claims are made elsewhere—but the tremendous importance to you of our claim is the TRUTH OF IT.

Will Medford citizens be satisfied with an article that gives you less protection and lower quality? Why not demand the protection that the Portland citizens insist upon?
