

MARKET MASTER RUNYARD QUILTS; 16 YEARS ON JOB

E. J. Runyard, who has been the market master of the city's public market for the past 16 years, ever since it was organized under the administration of former Mayor W. J. Canon, has resigned that position to take effect October 1 next, his resignation having been presented at this week's city council meeting and accepted by that body with praise for his successful incumbency all these years.

No successor has yet been appointed by the mayor and council, as they are taking time to consider the qualifications of a number of tentative candidates for the position, but the appointment will probably be announced at the next city council meeting in about two weeks.

In his formal resignation Mr. Runyard gives the reason for his coming retirement, as "because I am planning to remove to my place on Rogue river I will no longer be able to serve as market master," then he continues as follows:

"Upon retiring as market master for the past 16 years, I desire to express my sincere appreciation to the city administration, growers, consumers and to the local press for the co-operation accorded me, and which I feel has been responsible to a large extent for the success of the public market."

It has been greatly through the untiring efforts of Mr. Runyard and his pleasant treatment of the public, as well as the growers, that the public market of Medford is one of the best in the state. He has devoted his entire time to seeing that the growers produced high-quality products and that the market was well supplied.

Mr. Runyard has purchased the George Aiden place of 11 acres on beautiful stretch of the Rogue river three miles south of Gold Hill in the Pacific highway. The place is a modern residence, with a complete water system of its own, and is otherwise well improved. It is irrigated from the Rogue river, and Mr. Runyard purchased his desirable place for their future home and will move there the first of this month.

An auto collision took place yesterday evening on the Pacific highway near Blackwell hill when a truck driven by A. L. Kellogg and a Ford driven by Alfred Tremaine crashed. "Alfred Tremaine was driving north," said the accident report filed at the police station by Tremaine, "and met truck driving south and misjudged distance from truck and caught back wheel with front wheel of Ford and wrecked Ford. That's all."
