ERECT MONUMENT TO GENERAL LANE NEAR TABLE ROCK

Marking the spot where the Indian peace treaty was signed between the Rogue River Indians and General Joseph Lane in 1852, a monument is to be unveiled at Table Rock a week from next Sunday, with appropriate ceremonies which are now being prepared. Although there is some discussion and question over the exact spot, the monument will be placed on the north end of the Wykoff parcel, this location being believed to be the most suitable. The unveiling event will attract many Medford people to the scene and will recall the stirring days of the Indian wars in the Rogue River valley many years ago.

Regarding the event, the Portland Journal says editorially:
When Indians Made War.
A tall square pile of stone rises sheer out of a narrow valley in the banks of the Rogue river, Jackson county. It is Table Rock, and is a landmark in Oregon history," says an editorial in the Oregonian.

September 19, 1852, on a narrow bench against Table Rock, with hundreds of hostile Indians on neighboring hills and the foot and horse of pioneer Oregon volunteers looking on, a famous peace treaty was signed. The event is to be observed 75 years after by the dedication of a bronze tablet upon by the D. A. R., September 19.

"Trouble between Indians and whites in the Rogue River country began as early as 1826. Eight trappers were attacked by a band of Indians below Rocky Point on the Rogue river. The Indians entered the white men's camp in apparent peace, and unexpectedly attacked the party with clubs and knives. They got possession of three of the eight guns which the whites were armed. The whites fought with brands from the camp fire, clubbed guns and whatever came handy.

"The Indians were finally routed, but not until after some of the whites had been fatally wounded. The signing of the treaty at Table Rock was the culmination of trouble and bloodshed between the two races.

"While Indians and whites looked on General Joe Lane and Indian Joe" negotiated the terms of the pact. General Joe Lane, first territorial governor of Oregon, his left arm in a sling from a bullet wound, famous leader in Indian wars, spoke for the whites, and Indian Joe, tall, grave and armed in a black robe, presented the Indians. The powwow began in the morning and ended in the late afternoon.

"The treaty defined boundaries to be occupied by Rogue River and related Indian tribes, and provided that Indians within these boundaries should maintain peace with the whites, restore stolen property and deliver any of their tribesmen who might infringe the articles of the treaty. All firearms except 12 pieces reserved for hunting were to be surrendered by the Indians. They were to forfeit their annuities if they again made war. They ceded to the United States all their rights lying within certain boundaries, for which they were to receive $50,000. Five thousand dollars was to be expended by the

LOCAL ARCHITECT ACCORDED HONORS

Frank Clark, the well known Medford architect and member of the state board of architecture, recently had a signal honor conferred upon him, that being appointed a member of the committee selected by the governor to make a study of the state capital group at Salem, and to serve in place of W. R. B. Wilcox, professor of architecture at the University of Oregon, who was unable to serve.

Other members of this committee are Walter E. Church and Polger Johnson, Portland architects; Isaac Staples of Portland, Arthur L. Peck of Oregon State college, Frank Doenbach of Salem and Frank Miller of Albany.

Study of needs for a unified and comprehensive capitol building for Oregon at Salem will be started as soon as organization of the committee appointed by the governor can be effected, according to Fred Aandahl, secretary of Oregon chapter of the American Institute of Architects, which was prime mover in securing the governor's approval of the general plan.

HUMANE SOCIETY BOOTH AT FAIR

An attractive and unique exhibit will be made for the first time at the Jackson county fair by the Jackson County Humane society in the educational building.

There will be something to interest everyone who has humane work at heart. Children are invited to visit the booth to learn about the 1929 poster contest sponsored by the American Humane association of Albany, N. Y. Different prizes amounting to $500 will be awarded to the children making the best original humane posters. Examples explaining the kind of posters wanted can be seen at the booth.

The autoist who wishes to carry his dog with him on his travels will find the latest supplies of humane carriers to be placed on the running board, making the dog comfortable and safe. It is unkind to carry a dog on the running board or hot engine. In some sections the penalty for such cruelty is a heavy fine and jail sentence. It would be a progressive move should this law become general. The association will be glad to have trappers call and inspect the humane traps.

The National Humane Review, published at Albany, N. Y., has asked the privilege of publishing a photograph of this booth. Copies of this magazine will be mailed throughout the United States.

Change Car Lighting HELSINGFORDS (AP)—So many complaints have been received by the Finnish-State railways that some occupants of sleeping cars keep others awake by reading at night by the light of their gas lamps that electric lights are to be installed. The heavy cost involved in supplying a separate dynamo for each car will probably limit the number so equipped.
