Brisbane's Today

What would those clergymen say if CATHOLIC PRIESTS DISTRIBUTED SIMILAR CARDS PLEDGING THEIR PARISHIONERS TO VOTE AGAINST HOOVER?

A strong point in Mr. Hoover's campaign is his sincere denunciation of all personalities and all religious discussions in his campaign.

At intervals this column has asked Mr. Sloan, Mr. DuPont and other General Motor bosses, "Why don't you go into airplane building?"

General Motors is brilliantly managed, limitless in resources and energy. Airplane production on a gigantic scale is near.

And now comes the pleasing, unofficial announcement that General Motors "is preparing to establish a division for the manufacture of airplanes and equipment."

That "straight up and down" Spanish airplane should interest Mr. Sloan, also the gigantic building, biggest in the world, now building in England.

Modern dictators quarrel violently sometimes, but soon make up and are friends again. That proves wisdom.

Recently Kemal Pasha, dictator of Turkey, was sending her messages to Mussolini, the Italian dictator. He told Mussolini "If you ever send Italian soldiers to Turkey your big problem will be finding ground in which to bury them."

Now Mussolini writes politely thanking Kemal for hospitality to 1,000 young traveling Fascists. And Kemal replies just as politely.

Dictators, if wise, will hang together, for old-fashioned governments don't care for them.

to Catholic voters.

Quoting from it he said, "It tells how we have control of New York, attack together and we'll not control of the country." He said it apparently had been sent to the Masonic order in New York because "so many members of that order are friends of mine and have been voting for me for the last ten years."

He discovered any connection with the circular and said he would take a chance that "nobody inside of the Catholic church had been stupid enough to do a thing like that."

And then, as the crowd cheered, he added: "Let me make myself perfectly clear. I do not want any Catholic in the United States of America to vote for me on the 6th of November because I am a Catholic."

If any Catholic in this country believes that the welfare, the well-being, the prosperity, the growth and the expansion of the United States is best conserved and best promoted by the election of Hoover, I want him to vote for Hoover and not for me."

"But on the other hand," he continued, "I have the right to say that any citizen of this country that believes I can promote its welfare, that I am capable of steering the ship of state safely through the next four years and then votes against me because of my religion, he is not a real, pure, genuine American."

The nominee said that the "cry of Tammany Hall" which former Senator Owen had raised in a letter to Senator Simmons, Democrat, North Carolina, and printed in the Congressional Record, was "nothing more nor less than a red herring that is pulled across the trail in order to throw us off the scent."

As to the "whispering" against him, he said at one point: "One scandal in my administration would save the Republican national committee all the money that I believe they are using to spread through the mails this scurrilous propaganda."

He said a North Carolina woman who called on him recently at Albany, told him that the amount of anti-Smith propaganda that was being sent into her state "could not be printed and distributed for less than a million dollars."

Prior to the Democratic convention the governor said that the grand dragon of the real of Arkansas wrote to one of the delegates from that state saying he would not vote for Smith "on the ground of upholding American ideals and institutions as established by our forefathers."

"Now, can you think," the nominee asserted, "of any man or any group of men gathered together in what they call the Ku Klux Klan that profess to be 100 per cent American and forget the great principle that Jefferson stood for, the equality of man, and forget that our forefathers in their wisdom, foreseeing probably such a sight as we look at today, wrote into the fundamental law of the country that at no time was religion to be regarded as a qualification for office."

Referring to an item which he said was printed on the front page of a publication by the Ashland avenue Baptist church of Lexington, Ky., and which called attention that the papers had printed "How Governor Smith came near to a serious accident driving 50 miles an hour down Broadway while intoxicated," the governor said everybody knows he cannot operate an automobile.

"I turned that publication over and looked on the inside," he continued, "I saw that on the Sunday following its publication at 11 o'clock in the morning, the subject of worship was to be 'What think ye of Christ?'"

"Now I am compelled to the observation," he declared, "that the man or men responsible for that libelous slander against my character cannot possibly believe in Christ."

Handling as another "lie" a report that while governor he had appointed only Catholics to office, the governor amid cries of "Ham, Ham," directed at the Baptist minister on the platform, read a long list of his appointments showing a good portion of Protestants and Jews in his cabinet. In the state judiciary an county offices.

Charles E. Hatcher, Nicholas Murray Butler and others were named by the governor as having attested to his ability as an executive, although he said he did not "have to call any character witnesses for my administration."

Cries of "Pour it on 'em Al," went up from many in the big hall at frequent intervals during the address.

A Baptist minister delivered the invocation.

Governor Smith ignored a series of questions contained in a full-page advertisement in newspapers here seeking "further enlightenment" on the "un-Americanism" to him in similar manner in Omaha, Neb., and which he answered extemporaneously at the close of his farm speech there Tuesday night.

Orating with vigorous, sweeping gestures and at times assuming a crouching position as he came down with a swing to emphasize a point, the governor brought his address to a close with his appeal for a clean, constructive campaign.

"Let this debate be held in the open, and let us put down forever in this country this un-American, un-Christianlike doctrine that is finding its way into this campaign. Let us debate it on the level. Bring out into the open, have the records consulted and the platforms scrutinized. I am satisfied that the result on the 6th of November will show an overwhelming victory for the Democratic party."

"APPEL" SHIELDS MOTHER

In a line of automobiles. He noticed other motorists being searched and their effects examined. Realizing that inspection of his papers or baggage in the automobile would reveal his identity he felt that capture was imminent.

But luck and his own resourcefulness saved him. He noticed a woman accompanied by two children struggling with several suitcases. Alighting from his car, he hurried to assist her and while he was thus engaged the customs and immigration men missed him.

Northcott chuckled at the memory of the incident.

For a reason he did not divulge he turned back to the Canadian side and this narrow escape, but again entered the United States a short time later. Again he felt it wiser to return to Canada.

Early Tuesday the hunted man and his mother were driving north from Vancouver. They reached Lillooet, sped through the marble canyon, passed Ashcroft and reached Spence's Bridge Tuesday afternoon.

As told by Northcott it was a wild ride. "I was not accustomed to the car," he said, "and it had no brakes. Descending hills I put in reverse, but that did not do much good either. All the time my baggage, plainly marked with my initials, was in the car."

Spence's bridge he put his mother on the train to Calgary and drove to a point near Princeton. He left the car on the track five miles out of the town and hid his baggage in a bush.

From Princeton he took a train to West Summerland, and there embarked on a steamship which he thought was bound for Sicamous. This last "leg" of his trip led him into the hands of the police.

Northcott discussed on a variety of subjects. He had decided views on newspapers.

"The newspapers, especially the ones in the south," he said, "convict a man before he comes to trial. I do not think there should be so much publicity about crimes before the man charged with them comes to court. I don't blame the newspapers so much. They are in a competitive business, but I do blame the administration that permits the practice." The Hickman case was cited to him as example of his contention.

"Oh, that was different," he said, "Hickman deserved all he got."
