

NEWS of the DAY in PICTURES

JUST WHAT THIS COSTUME has to do with Noah and his ark we haven't the faintest idea—but, regardless of that, this is how Dolores Costello looks in the new movie "Noah's Ark," now being filmed at Hollywood.

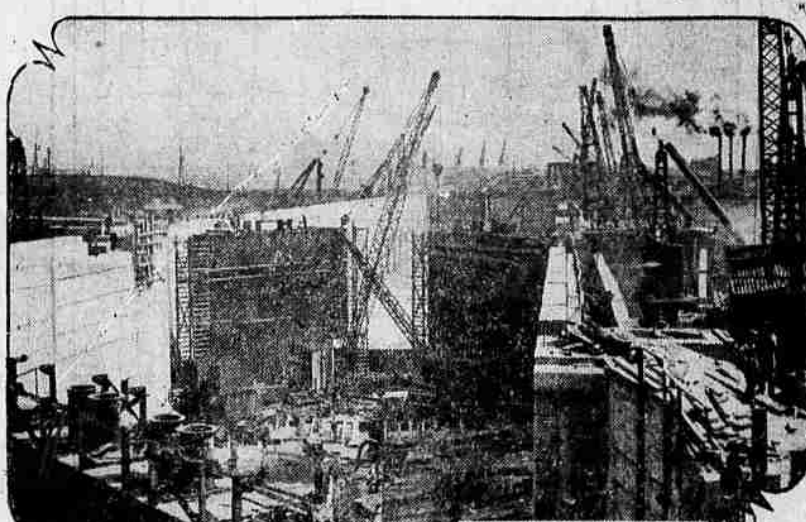

AN ANKLE bracelet was considered the height of daring once upon a time—but not now. This Portland (Ore.) miss is shown here displaying a knee bracelet, the newest fad in jewelry.

AN ENDLESS FOREST OF DERRICKS THAT PUMP LIQUID BLACK GOLD from the depths of the earth—that's the famous Spindle Top oil field at Beaumont, Texas, shown here in this striking panorama.

TEN YEARS AGO THIS PICTURE wouldn't have been received favorably in this country, but in the year 1928 it's all right. It shows Maj. Gen. Hartig, commander of the Second German army division (center), consulting with staff officers during the recent field maneuvers of the German troops.

WHEN A TRANSATLANTIC LINER GOES TO THE HOSPITAL it's a costly process—and so is the job of building the hospital in the first place. This shows construction of the new Tilbury dry docks at London, which will be able to accommodate the largest ocean steamers.

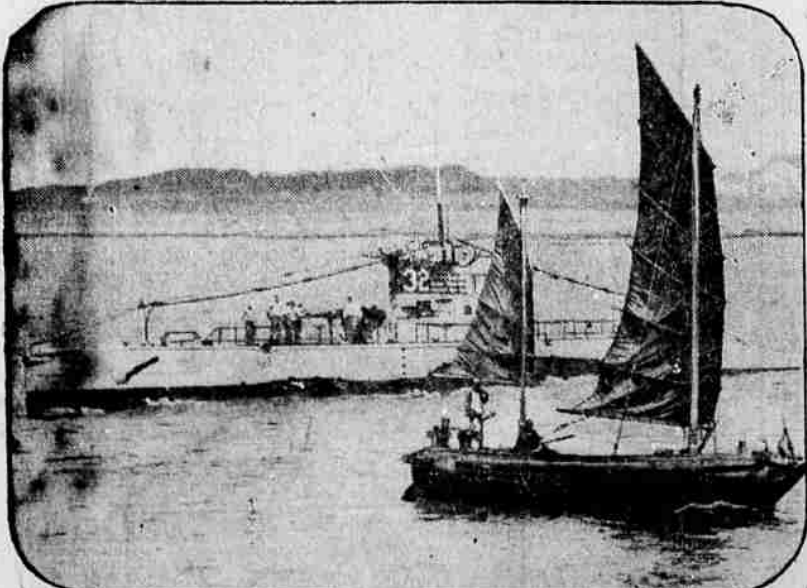

LAZY WHITE CLOUDS DRIFT ACROSS THE SKY AS THE PACK TRAIN comes out on the mountain peak for a brief rest before starting down the other side. The picture shows a mail supply pack train crossing the top of Vista Pass en route to the Tonquin Valley in Jasper National Park, Canada.

GOLDEN EAGLES don't frighten Walter Sproul, 13-year-old Mono county (Calif.) boy. Walter is shown here with a big eagle which he recently captured alive.

BLACK SHADOWS BROKEN BY FLAMING LIGHTS make Broadway at night a place of glamour and mystery. This remarkable photo of the famous street was made by a cameraman who took a time exposure about one minute in duration and finished it with a flashlight. The time exposure got in the lights; the flash got in the people.

MODERN SUBMARINE AND ANCIENT SAILING CRAFT met in the bay at Tsing-tao, China, when a small Chinese junk, a vessel whose type is centuries old, sailed by the U. S. submarine S-32, lying at anchor there.

GLAMOROUS ROSE of old Monterey was Miss Marian Minges, shown here in the garb she wore at the picturesque Serra Pilgrimage festival, recently held in Monterey, California's first capital.

A NEW PET for the White House is Palo Alto, puppy hunting dog, presented to President Coolidge recently by Clare Wildner of Superior, Wis. The president is shown here with the dog.

THE GARDEN OF OLD ENGLAND is the title British people bestow on the county of Kent—and here's a harvest scene that helps you to understand why. It shows a typical agricultural countryside in the vicinity of the town of Otford.
