

CHICAGO GUNMEN STAGE ASSAULT ON RIVAL LEADER

CHICAGO, Oct. 11.—(By Edward Spahr) O'Donnell, leader of one faction in what police call the South Side "Haw" War, was shot on only to return and in his machine gun, concealed in an automobile, asked the shortage of Spahr's brother, Stephen, shortly after midnight.

The four motorcars halted in front of the garage and the guns pointed into the building. The first was returned, and the cars sped on, only to return and in his machine gun, concealed in an automobile, asked the shortage of Spahr's brother, Stephen, shortly after midnight.

An abandoned automobile was found a few blocks from the garage. Police said they believed it to be one owned by "Polack Joe" Salts, rival of the O'Donnell brothers in the South Side beer business.

"Salts" escape this time, however, was considered little short of miraculous by the police after questioning O'Donnell and examining his clothes. It was revealed two bullets had pierced his clothing and a third, virtually spent, had struck him in the arm inflicting a minor wound.
