Motor travel over the Shastya mountains, because of snow and slush, is reported somewhat dangerous, and yesterday five cars slipped off the highway into ditches as a result of the slippery condition. However, the cars were not badly damaged and none of the occupants were injured. To guard against this slippery condition, the state highway department early this week sandblasted the curves in order to afford better traction, but several inches of snow, which melted into slush aided by rain, made the road useless.

The fire department this forenoon was called to the Medford Fuel company plant at the end of North Central avenue because of a fire in a wood saw machine. It seems that while workmen were engaged in sawing, the connecting rod of the machine broke and knocked a hole in the gas tank, which exploded and practically ruined the sawing outfit. No other damage was done, and no one was injured.

While it is impossible to make the highway "fool proof," the highway maintenance crew keeps busy these days doing their best to protect those passing over the Shastya, according to Bill Drummond, foreman, who is in charge of the maintenance work from the California border to Medford. "Slippery curves are real dangers—and in the morning when they are covered with a thin coating of ice, they are almost sure to be carelessly spotted," Drummond declared. "The maintenance crew 'sands' these dangerous curves each morning and in this way, minimizes the hazard. —Ashland Tidings.
