NEW YORKER AT LARGE

By G. D. Seymour.

NEW YORK, N. Y., Nov. 28.—Suburbanites commencing to New York offices each morning on the train which leaves Tarrytown at 8:23 may find themselves—unless they ride in the smoking car—seated opposite John D. Rockefeller, Jr.

He is chauffeured to the station about train time, from the nearby Rockefeller estate at Pocantico Hills, in a small light green sedan which looks as if it might be the one Henry Ford gave Mr. Rockefeller, Jr. He always stands apart from the crowd on the station platform, and waits until the others have gotten on the train before making his way to a seat.

Once seated, he takes a sheet of correspondence and papers out of a cardboard portfolio and immerses himself in inspection of them during the 40-minute ride to the Grand Central terminal.

Generally he is clad in brown business suit and dark brown top coat, but companion commuters have yet to report seeing him in the same suit or top coat on two successive days. His hat is of gray felt.

At the Grand Central he generally is met by his own town car, in which he rides to the office he and his father rent from the Standard Oil company of New York in its building at 26 Broadway.

Squash Keeps Him Fit. Of medium build and less than medium height, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., looks considerably less than his 54 years—perhaps not more than 45. His eyes are a clear blue, his complexion is ruddy, and his hair seems only a little grayed.

His soundness Rockefeller attributes to the physical exercise he gets. Each noon at lunch time he plays squash for 40 minutes at the Whitehall club near his office—except in winter, when he is living at his town house on East 54th street. Then he frequently substitutes a walk in Central Park before dinner, or plays squash on a court at home.

During the eight months or so each year when he is living on the family estate, he catches a 5:05 train for Tarrytown in the afternoon, to be met again with the sedan and whisked up the grade and inside the great stone gate of Pocantico Hills.

Behind the Wings. So numerous are the offstage effects in Channing Pollock's new play, "Mr. Moneybags," that there are 500 cues to be headed by hands and operators in the wings. Tickers, offstage voices, mechanical music and similar devices must be heard repeatedly; money must be shoveled in and scene down a chute to the stage, and sets must be shifted quickly and on signal. It is said the bill for stage hands during New York and Philadelphia rehearsals ran to $13,000.

And yet producers today aren't called to provide a lot of prop-erties that were in demand in theaters of 400 years ago. T. H. Vail Matter relates, in his current study, "The School Drama in England," that items required for the performance of a play by Westminster school children in 1564 included frankincense to perfume the auditorium, candy for the child players and "but-tered hooves for ye children being horse" not to speak of wares laid out for "the loan of a thousand barrels and two men which brought the same and thondered."

"Show People" at Hunt's Craterian

King Vidor is said to chuckle at Charlie Chaplin over an incident in the filming of "Show People," now playing at Hunt's Craterian. It has all-star casts, the real stars of pictureland are snapped as they stroll about the sets or sit over sandwiches in the studio lunch-room.

These incidental stars are offered in addition to two headliners, Marion Davies and William Haines as a stage-struck girl who wants to play tragedy but finds herself in slapstick, and a young comedian with more than a touch of swifthead.

Vidor is a young man distinguished among directors, responsible for "The Big Parade" and "The Crowd," as well as an early romantic success, "The Jack Knife Man," and one of Marion Davies' "funniest pictures," "The Pat.".

Why not start the day right? Healthful breakfasts can and should be the most appetizing

IF THE fiber foods are so important in our diet—and food authorities impress upon us that they are—why not start the day right by eating them for breakfast? They can be made into the most delicious and satisfying breakfast imaginable.

Just think for a moment what foods it is that furnish the bulk and fiber that our bodies need so badly. They are: bran and cereals, and fruits and vegetables, all but the last being ideal for the first meal of the day. What is more tasteful and beneficial, for example, than cereal with milk and sugar? What is more delicious for breakfast than grapefruit, sweetened to taste, or apples or pears sweetened and baked? Nearly every one enjoys apple sauce or stewed prunes or other dried fruit with the morning toast and coffee.

Note that sugar is mentioned in connection with each one of these healthful foods. Sugar is the ideal flavor that Nature has provided, thus enabling people to enjoy the kinds of foods that are best for them.

One fact cannot be stressed too much. All growing children should eat hearty breakfasts of bone and teeth building, body developing foods such as the cereals, milk and fruits. Proper sweetening makes children relish the foods that their growing bodies need so badly.

Eat varied healthful foods, so sweetened that they are delicious and enjoyable. The Sugar Institute.
