

MEDFORD MAIL TRIBUNE

Daily, Sunday, Weekly... MEDFORD PRINTING CO. 11-27-28 N. 7th St. Phone 75

ROBERT W. RUEL, Editor... MEDFORD MAIL TRIBUNE... An Independent Newspaper

MEMBER OF THE ASSOCIATED PRESS... Official paper of the City of Medford.

Advertising Representative... M. O. MOORE & COMPANY

Ye Smudge Pot

By Arthur Perry... This is the day of the year when the community is full of Turkey and Football—and both are now being vigorously re-hashed.

The horn of plenty, and the gasoline tank... The town of plenty, and the gasoline tank...

The local pigskin enthusiasts who journeyed to Portland, had a fine time and a glorious plout, and poked out their chests with honest pride.

Leading citizens made the trip this year. Among the same was Jim Owen, of the O-O. James was unduly fearful.

Mr. Flewcher, the demon baker, also went along. Mr. Flewcher had the best sequel of his busy career, and out-quoted the high school girls abroad.

Willie Gates was present. Peoria told of the efficiency of the Corns Product company, and discussed learnedly the feasibility of feeding spinach to young folks.

Mr. Griev and his hired man, of Prospect, were also among those present. Mr. G. woke up, and did not wear his cowboy hat.

Dignity was loaned to the occasion by the Mayor, Dock Block, beaming joyously, pulled a stranger's thumb back in place, and confessed he had all the football beared for until next fall.

The writer left with the flu, and returned without it, to the great amazement of Komeo Roppes, who predicted a hospital, and said he refused to believe that the death of the disease has been circumvented.

ROSEBURG—Fine new steel bridge costing $25,000 between here and Elsie, opened today.

GRESHAM—Local city hall grounds improved and shrubs planted by community club.

State Highway Department will spend $500,000 on roads in Klamath county.

Modern Improved Highway No. 20 now in use from Atlantic City to Astoria is federal-aid road of 2347 miles from coast to coast.

REASIDE—C. F. W. Williams Paper company carrying on extensive replanting of timberland in Tillamook Head district.

COQUILLE—Contract let for carrying of rural mail from here to Leavee.

THE AMATEUR SPIRIT

AMERICA has the reputation of being money mad. "Every one and everything in the United States has its price."

But the football season, now closing, demonstrates this is not true. No one can buy the college football player. That is why the demand for big game football tickets so exceeds the supply.

How Hard-Cash Pyle and Tex Luckard would like to buy up the big game rights. But it can't be done. Nor is there any amount of money that would tempt a college football player to throw a game.

That is why there is such a scramble for seats. The people know the game will be on the square, that 22 young men will fight to the last gasp merely for glory.

Sixty thousand people paid $300,000 to see "Red" Grange play his last game for his Alma Mater. Hard-Cash Pyle had hard work to get 6000 to pay $12,000 to see "Red" play for 20 per cent of the gate receipts.

The amateur spirit in sports is something that can't—as yet—be purchased. Every fall millions of people pay million of dollars for the privilege of witnessing a sport, in which the almighty dollar has no standing and plays no part.

FIELD SECRETARY OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH TO SPEAK

Rev. Malcolm McLeod of Pittsburg, Penn., recently appointed field secretary for the men's work of the Presbyterian church on the Pacific coast, will speak at the Presbyterian church Sunday evening at 7:30 p. m.

Rev. McLeod was formerly pastor of the First Presbyterian church at Des Moines, Iowa, and also of the First Church of Tacoma, Washington. When in Washington he was counted the best preacher in that synod. He is a vital character and has a strong message for men of the day.

Every one is invited to this service Sunday evening. On Thursday evening of next week the 6th of December, Dr. McLeod will also be the speaker for the December meeting of the Presbyterian men's club, to which all men of the Presbyterian congregation are invited.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 30.—Motorists throughout America give sincere thanks for the high performance of their modern motor vehicles—for the quick get-away, high speed, added economy and greater beauty of today's better car.

Colonel Lindbergh aroused interest in aviation and immediately it became necessary to produce more fuel for airplanes. Then it was discovered that these airplane-type gasolines were excellent in the new high-compression automobile engines.

The local dealers ask that you call and see electricity's newest gift and unfailing, accurate time clocks.

Two years of college work after high school graduation will be required for admission to law schools in New York state after October, 1929.

TILLAMOOK—Local linemen of Mountain States Power Co. have been repairing tangled high voltage wires during lashing storm on coast here and restored light and power to city.

WALDPORT—Bids ordered for construction of Roosevelt highway from Yaquina Bay to Yachits and Cape Perpetua.

FAIRVIEW—New school addition completed and occupied.

MUTT AND JEFF—Oh, Well!

THE WAY JEFF CAN COOK HAS BEEN A REVELATION TO ME. THE DINNER HE DISHED OUT YESTERDAY WAS A WONDER—EVERY DISH WAS FIT FOR A KING!

Personal Health Service

By WILLIAM BRADY, M. D. Signed letters pertaining to personal health and hygiene, not to disease diagnosis or treatment, will be answered by Dr. Brady if a stamped, self-addressed envelope is enclosed.

Years ago Trendelenburg devised an operation for the cure of varicose veins, and the operation was quite successful in cases where the vein weakening, dilation or enlargement was limited to the superficial veins.

White Elephant. I have been presented with several bottles of somebody's compound syrup of hypophosphites, containing hypophosphites of potassium, calcium, sodium and manganese together with iron and the tonic alkaloids quinine and strychnine.

Uddies for Children. What would you advise as the most sensible underwear for young children in the winter time. They are healthy and play out of doors, of course with warm wraps.

Not a Bather. Some people will say it is just like the movies to have things happen that way. Anyway it is a fact that Lucien Hubbard, who is directing the first big underwater spectacle film...

Ed rather hoped that maybe somehow on account of the Hoover landslide we'd get a White House lava snaphost showin' Coolidge smilin', but no such luck.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. No Moebius Suggestion. I believe you have offered to send anyone who asks for it a treatise on acne and similar skin troubles.

Delighted to Help. I am a girl 16 years old and I might be quite happy only that my face is constantly breaking out with pimples.

SOYBEAN BUY-MAKES AN EXCELLENT VALUE ration of high feeding value for livestock, particularly for young cattle, sheep, horses and mules.

IN THE more distant islands under the French administration at Tahiti, natives still respect the authority of their hereditary kings and chiefs.

THE public, as usual, will not doubt settle the argument in its own way, at the box-office. Meanwhile the following remark is typical:

Administration of the Shick test for diphtheria and the Dick test for scarlet fever is compulsory for all pupils between certain ages in government schools of Mexico, under recent presidential decree.

IN northern France whole families visit cinema houses on a special day of the week, occupying reserved seats.

SOYBEAN BUY-MAKES AN EXCELLENT VALUE ration of high feeding value for livestock, particularly for young cattle, sheep, horses and mules.

IN the more distant islands under the French administration at Tahiti, natives still respect the authority of their hereditary kings and chiefs.

THE public, as usual, will not doubt settle the argument in its own way, at the box-office. Meanwhile the following remark is typical:

Administration of the Shick test for diphtheria and the Dick test for scarlet fever is compulsory for all pupils between certain ages in government schools of Mexico, under recent presidential decree.

IN northern France whole families visit cinema houses on a special day of the week, occupying reserved seats.

SOYBEAN BUY-MAKES AN EXCELLENT VALUE ration of high feeding value for livestock, particularly for young cattle, sheep, horses and mules.

Screen Life in Hollywood

By Wade Werner. HOLLYWOOD, Cal.—No blows have been struck as yet, nor has there been any hair-pulling, but it is difficult for the peaceful folk in elioter Hollywood to associate aligning themselves into two hostile camps: those who came to pictures from the stage and those who learn all they know in the silence of the voiceless cinema.

Phyllis Haver who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Some of those who found fame without ever throwing a voice over the footlights, feel that some of the stage-trained players are too sure of their superiority in the new talking picture era, and too inclined to give patronizing advice on how to succeed in the new talking medium.

From the recording rooms of the sound-stages where famous film faces are being assayed for voice there come conflicting reports. Colleen Moore, Phyllis Haver, and other favorites who traveled the silent road to success are said to have passed their voice tests with ease, and the producer, Paul Bern, goes so far as to say the best screen voice he has found belongs to the child player Junior Coghlan, an utter stranger to the footlights.

Rippling Rhymes

By Walt Mason. THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man, you must admit, in these wild times we seldom meet." The boasters, hearing, stood aghast, and seemed incensed, and murmured "Hats!" These relics of a misty past are all declining through their hair. There always are some moody wights, and prophets, desolate and dun, who'd kill off all our sane delights, and put wet blankets on our fun. The name of progress they detest, they hate to see a town advance; on everything that's for the best, they look with stern, forbidding glance. Ah, now we hated those old guys, who watched us with a gloomy frown, who tried to look exceedingly wise, and said the boom would fizzle down! We said their presence could but mar the fairest village of the vale; we talked of feathers and of far, and of excursions on a rail. But they were right; one bitter morn we found the boom had bumped the bumps; we stood, dejected and forlorn, and told each other we were chumps. The mouskings were the only men surviving in the flattened town from whom to borrow five or ten—and they were wise—they turned us down.

THE CONSERVATIVES. When Punktown had its famous boom, and men grew wealthy in a day, so I looked as solemn as the bomb, and said: "This craze will pass away. And when the bottom's fallen out, and Punktown's starting to deflate, oh that indeed will be the scout who didn't buy up real estate. It's well enough to buy two lots to buy three lots of maybe four, and hit some elevated spots before the jambores is over; it's well enough if one can quit and not be swept clean off his feet; but such a man,